The players in the Stanley Cup are paid for only the first four games of each series, so Philadelphia Flyers saw no point in prolonging the agony in their best-of-seven quarter-final against Toronto Maple Leafs. They polished off the Leafs four straight with a 4-3 overtime victory Saturday. Buffalo Sabres, Montreal Canadiens and Pittsburgh Penguins have similar thoughts. They're leading 3-1 in their respective series. Page 10.

Bitter Thieu Quits, Lashes Out at U.S.

Times News Services

President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam today announced his resignation as North Vietnamese forces pressed closer toward Saigon.

He said former U.S. president Richard Nixon gave him written promises of aid but U.S. Secretary-of-State Henry Kissinger betrayed South Vietnam. "I never thought a man like Kissinger would deliver our people to such a fate," he charged.

Thieu's resignation opened the way for possible negotiations of a ceasefire with the Communists, but in Paris the Viet Cong raised new demands — immediate withdrawal of all Americans from Vietnam and elimination from power of all members of Thieu's "clique."

Whether the communists would even try to negotiate a cease-fire now was a matter of doubt.

They have massed 100,000 troops for a final assault on Saigon and have moved the front lines to within 26 miles of the presidential palace.

Hours before Thieu's resignation, military analysts in Saigon said the government's situation on the battlefield appeared hopeless.

Radio contact, meanwhile, was lost with South Vietnamese forces under heavy attack at Xuan Loc, the gateway to the capital 40 miles east of Saigon, and still another province on the coast 35 miles farther east apparently was about to fall.

In his speech Thieu predicted: "There will be more challenges and fierce fighting in the near future."

He then announced his resignation, and added:

"I told President Nixon and the U.S. Congress that I did not demand an indefinite assistance but only assistance for five years so we can develop our economy."

At Clark Air Base in the Philippines, the pace of evacuation from beseiged Saigon continued to quicken Sunday night with arrival of planeload after planeload of Americans and Vietnamese on the first leg of trips to the United States for the first time.

Some of the Vietnamese passengers were bearing large white "laissez passer" documents issued by the Saigon government, which serve both as exit visas and temporary entry permits to the United States.

The appearance of these diplomatic papers was taken as a sign that Saigon has begun to ease its strictness on departure of Vietnamese nationals.

Most of the Vietnamese arriving Sunday night appeared to be wives and children of departing Americans, many of them civilian contractors who worked for the American military in Saigon.

About 500 Vietnamese without travel papers are being held here as stateless persons pending decisions of the U.S. government.

The resignation of the 52-year-old Thieu and his denunciation of the United States raised fears of anti-American outbursts in the South Vietnamese capital.

"If the United States had intervened as it should, Thieu declared, "we would not be losing province capitals, district capitals, and we would not be faced with losing the national capital."

In Bangkok, Thai officials said today that Hhieu's resignation bodes ill for Thailand.

"It looks as though South Vietnam is going the way of Cambodia — I give it 10 days to a month," a Thai foreign ministry spokesman said.

EAST POSTIES OFF THE JOB

Times News Services

Letter carriers walked off the job at 6 a.m. local time for an indefinite period in Ottawa, Kitchener-Waterloo, Ont., and Saskatoon.

Picket lines were set up at post offices but inside workers were allowed to cross them.

The union has been in a legal position to go on strike since April 14 and the men "were just exercising their right to strike," said Ottawa union representative Alex Edey.

Negotiations between the union and the post office are scheduled today, he said.

Main issue in talks between the post office and union negotiators in a conciliation report which proposes wage increases totalling $68 a week over two years. Three-year letter carriers now earn an average $177.60 a week.

Increases in the conciliation report are 38 per cent; the government has offered 25 per cent over two years.

The Letter Carriers Union and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers last week agreed that if one union goes on strike, it will lift picket lines temporarily to allow members of the other union to go to and from work.

POUND REPEATS PLUMMET

LONDON (CP) — The pound dropped sharply Monday to match its record low against major currencies amid reports British authorities will allow further depreciation of sterling rather than rely on borrowing abroad.

The Bank of England's calculation of the trade-weighted depreciation of the pound against 10 currencies widened to match the record depreciation set April 14 and Jan. 28.

The pound fell more than one cent to $2.3622 U.S. from $2.3754 Friday.

The London Sunday Times said the U.K. Treasury was prepared to let sterling drop rather than continue borrowing abroad to support it.

Meanwhile, gold declined sharply amid rumors that some South Vietnamese gold was reaching the market. The price fell to $165.60 U.S. an ounce at the London afternoon fixing from $168 in the morning and $170.25 Friday afternoon. Later, a London dealer was quoting $165 an ounce bid $165.75 offered.

Levy for School Tax Taking a Bigger Bite

Taxpayers in B.C. will pay an average of 41.21 mills to cover school costs this year, an increase of 7.15 mills over 1974.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly announced the increases today and promised school districts an additional $25.5 million in special grants to help cover mounting educational costs.

The basic school tax levy applied to all districts in B.C. has been set at 26.5 mills, an increase of 1.8 mills over last year, said Dailly, but almost all school districts have drawn up budgets far in excess of the basic budget allowance set by the provincial government and thus actual tax rates will be much higher.

Under the government's complicated financing formula, the government sets out a basic mill rate all school boards can levy (26.5 mills this year) and the basic amount it can spend for each student in the district.

The difference between the revenue raised by the basic tax rate and the basic education cost is then provided by the government in the form of a grant.

But, since all districts have costs over and above the basic budget and those costs are paid by local taxpayers, the average mill rate is much higher.

Last year the average school mill rate was 34.06 almost 10 mills higher than the basic rate and this year the average rate is 15 mills over the basic levy.

Dailly also announced $25.5 million in supplementary special aid grants to school districts to help them maintain existing programs and staffing levels this year.

The special money follows a commitment by the minister last January that no district will incur mill rate increases dramatically higher than the over-all average.

Last year the government provided an additional $21 million in special grants to school boards in order to help them reduce pupil-teacher ratios and to lessen the impact of inflating education costs on local taxpayers.

Earlier this year, Dailly would not say whether the government planned to repeat those special grants and school boards warned they would have to cut back on programs unless additional funds were forthcoming.

In some districts, where enrolments are increasing at an especially rapid rate, school boards reported they could not possibly continue the reduced student-teacher ratios without huge increases in local taxes.

Dailly said $3.8 million of the additional grants will go to those districts which had an increase in enrolments and special classes last fall.

Immediate Gas Export Talks Set

WASHINGTON (CP) — Canadian and United States officials are scheduled to meet Tuesday in Ottawa to discuss proposed price increases on Canadian natural gas exported to the U.S.

Julius Katz, deputy assistant state secretary in the division of economics and business affairs, will lead the U.S. group, Katz's office said today.

"The subject is natural gas, that's all I can tell you," the spokesman said.

One informed source, who asked not to be identified, said: "The U.S. has requested the talks and Canada has agreed."

It would not immediately known who would speak for Canada.

John Nassikas, head of the Federal Power Commission (FPC), was tentatively scheduled to go but—because of a prior commitment to testify on Capitol Hill on Tuesday—will send Frank Allen, his top staff man on natural gas matters.

The word that the U.S. had asked for the meeting came less than 24 hours after two veteran senators had sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau asking for a delay in price increases.

CUPE, Region Renew Mediation

Mediation talks were renewed today for the third time in Greater Victoria civic employees dispute which entered its 14th week this morning.

The meeting at Royal Oak Inn was called by provincial mediation officer Clark Gilmour, who was asked to arrange it by regional employers who, it is reported, are looking for a change in approach by the Canadian Union of Public Employees which represents municipal staffs.

On behalf of the union, CUPE Local 50 president Jim Walker was non-commital prior to the meeting.

Just before the sides moved into separate meeting rooms, Walker said, "we're here to hear what they've got to say."

He did not indicate that the unions had any proposal to put forward and pointed out that all CUPE locals in the past two weeks had given their neogitators votes of confidence.

Gilmour made no prediction on how long today's meetings would last.

90 SEE DRIVER BEATEN

TORONTO (CP) — A 24-year-old Toronto bus driver was badly beaten by four youths on the weekend while about 90 passengers sat and watched.

"They just looked at me as if they were watching TV," said driver Jack Sardinha. "Not a single person would make a move."

He was treated for a cut eye and other head injuries.

A pregnant woman trying to board the bus was pushed to the ground and injured and a construction worker, who saw the incident and chased the youths, was struck in the forehead with a brick.

Sardinha said the incident began when a youth threw a quarter in the fare box and the other three just "marched right by." The regular fare is 40 cents.

He said he tried to stop one of the men, who claimed he had paid the fare, and the fight began.

"I tried to get up and as soon as I moved one of his buddies just let me have it. Then it was a chain reaction and they all piled on like a pack of wolves . . . They were really going at me."

Garnet Gardield Reid 16, Lenny Andrew Wilson, 18, Hansel Alonzo, 18, and Everton George Brown, 18, all of Toronto, have been charged with assault causing bodily harm and will appear in court today.

WCB Pays . . . 44 Years Late

A 61-year-old Nanaimo man has won a 44-year battle with the Workers Compensation Board and will finally receive compensation for a crippling accident that happened when he was 17.

Frank Oblack will be paid a pension retroactive to 1931 and will receive five per cent interest on the money he should have been receiving since then, the disability award officer of the WCB has ruled.

Oblack will probably receive a lump sum payment in about two months, after the WCB has computed the amount of his pension.

Oblack won his case with the help of a Victoria organization, the Disability Rights Association, set up about three years ago to help workers in their claims against the WCB.

In 1931, when Oblack was an inexperienced boy of 17 working at the South Wellington mine near Nanaimo, he was crushed between a mine car and a post which was standing too close to the car track.

He was taken to hsopital in serious condition with a crushed pelvis and has suffered a deformity of both the hips and pelvis since then. He has been unable to perform many types of work because of the injury.

At the time of the accident, his claim was turned down by the Workman's Compensation Board which ruled that Oblack was not performing part of his regular duties when he was crushed by the mine car.

The case became famous in the Nanaimo area and was appealed to the Board of Commissioners of the WCB, but again turned down. In 1941, the case was contested at the Sloan Inquiry held in Nanaimo and again turned down. But this time there was

Hanoi Troops Leading New Laos Drive

VIENTIANE (UPI) — North Vietnamese troops today spearheaded new attacks on Highway 13 linking Vientiane and the royal Laotian capital of Luang Prabang and defence minister Sishouk Na Champassak said government forces are in danger of losing control of the road.

Prime Minister Prince Souvanna Phouma sent an urgent cable to the headquarters of the pro-Communist Pathet Lao near the northeastern border with North Vietnam requesting orders be issued for the attackers to withdraw.

The cable was addressed to Prince Souphanouvong, Souvanna's half brother and titular leader of the Pathet Lao. Sishouk said that if the Communists do not withdraw, it would pose a serious threat to the peace agreement and ceasefire that has been generally observed since 1973.

Sishouk told a news conference that two government positions near the road were abandoned Sunday night and that fighting was continuing today near the junction of Highway 13 with Highway 7 in mountainous country 90 miles north of Vientiane, the administrative capital of Laos.

Government air force T28 bombers were ordered to fly air strikes against the attackers and reinforcements were being moved into the area, Sishouk said.

Military sources said it could not be determined whether the road had been cut. They described casualties in the fighting so far as minor.

The renewed fighting was in the same area where government troops lost some positions along the ceasefire line last week in a Communist attack timed to conicide with the Laotian New Year celebration.

Fighting died down Thursday but resumed Sunday with a combined force of North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao troops moving against the government positions, Sishouk said.

On the diplomatic front, Laotian Foreign Minister Phoumi Vongvichit has informed South Vietnam's ambassador Houng Co Thuy that Laos is closing its embassy in Saigon, diplomatic sources said.

The formal reason given for the closing was the security situation in Saigon, but the sources noted that the Laotian coalition government had already decided to freeze relations with South Vietnam until the outcome of the present fighting.

★ A Flood Of Refugees For Thais

Times News Services

Troops of Cambodia's defeated government are fleeing across the border to neighboring Thailand despite attempts by the Communist-led Khmer Rouge victors to halt the exodus.

Radio Phnom Penh, meanwhile, remained silent on the fate of supporters of the fallen government, and Pope Paul VI appealed to the Cambodian conquerors for moderation.

Reports reaching Bangkok said more than 10,000 Cambodians have sought refuge in Thailand in recent weeks, with the exodus speeding up since the Khmer Rouge captured Phnom Penh last Thursday.

The Thai government ordered the Cambodian border sealed soon after the Khmer Rouge marched into Phnom Penh, but thousands of refugees have managed to get across the frontier.

Thai Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj has said the refugees would be allowed to stay in Thailand no longer than 30 days, or until the situation in Cambodia has been clarified.

GRENADES FOUND IN PLAYGROUND

CHILLIWACK (CP) — An anonymous phone call saturday led RCMP to an elementary school sandbox where the last eight of 10 live grenades, stolen last week from a shipment of 300, were buried.

RCMP Sergeant Frank Scotti said the grenades were found in the corner of the sandbox in a school yard "very close to the area where the grenades were stolen from just outside the city limits."

The other two grenades were found Friday after two anonymous calls.

"They hadn't been boobytrapped," Sgt. Scotti said. "Two of the canisters were open, showing that this young man had been playing around with them, same as the previous two that were found. We're just hoping that his conscience is going to get him and he's going to give himself up.

"I think he's a very scared young man. He should be. I don't think he really realizes what he had on his hands."

If children had found the grenades in the sandbox, "we could have had an enormous tragedy on our hands," Scotti added.

Mayors Joining Demands For Levy Group Inquiry

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia municipal leaders share the demand made last week by Vancouver Mayor Art Phillips that a "shocking" boost in the operating cost of the B.C. Assessment authority should be investigated.

Phillips said Saturday he was "shocked and horrified" at the huge increases being levied for 1975 by the provincial assessment authority to cover its administration costs.

Mayor Ross Marks of 100-Mile House, immediate past president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities, said he finds the big increase in assessment operating costs "are incredible."

"This is all new to us, of course. Because of our small population we didn't pay the assessment cost prior to this year. Now, apparently, we're going to have to put a 1.17 mill levy into our budget," said Marks.

The increased assessment levy appears to be another instance "of where this government says its going to give you more in one area, then take it away from somewhere else," he added.

The B.C. Assessment Authority was set up last year by provincial legislation to handle assessments for all municipalities.

The municipalities previously had handled their own assessment departments under the direction of the provincial assessment commissioner.

Mayor Ron Andrews of North Vancouver district said his municipality will be hit as hard as Vancouver by the levy and he would support the call for an investigation although such an inquiry would likely determine "the increased costs were due to adding highly paid employees to the assessment organization."

a dissenting member of the board, Commissioner Parker Williams, who later wrote an article for a mineworkers magazine saying he was disgusted by the ruling.

The case was then dropped for more than 30 years until January, 1975, when Oblack came to the Disability Rights Association which reopened the case with the WCB.

The association obtained transcripts of all the other hearings held on Oblack's case and again presented them to the WCB.

But this time the claim was allowed and last week Oblack was informed that he would receive his pension.

The amount of the pension has not yet been determined.

A NEW WORLD OF UNDERSTANDING

Mountbatten's Long Dream Comes True

Plaque tells own story

Mrs. Pearson, Drury share joke

Lord Mountbatten of Burma saw the fruits of his labors at Pearson College of the Pacific Saturday.

"I feel just like a mother elephant who's been carrying young. A mother elephant takes many years in the period of gestation. Now the baby is out of the womb and crying lustily, and I'm thrilled," he told 400 persons gathered for the Metchosin college's official dedication.

Former British naval leader, statesman and uncle of the queen, Mountbatten was made first international president of United World Colleges in 1968 and still holds that post.

He and Lester B. Pearson excitedly discussed the concept of the college six years ago, and it now bears the name of the man who swore to Mountbatten he would fire Canadians' hearts with the idea as his had been fired.

Maryon Pearson attended the college ceremony in place of her husband who died before realizing that dream.

Speakers addressing the crowd in the evergreen shade and biting chill of the Pedder Bay campus included United Nations' representative Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, B.C. Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, federal treasury board chairman Jean Chretien and college director Jack Matthews.

"Students should think internationally," said Mountbatten. "All the trouble in the world has been caused by complete misunderstanding between the nations.

"If there's another misunderstanding the world will be destroyed."

Countries represented by the college's 100 students include Brazi, Japan, Malta, West Germany and Canada. It is the third such college in the world, following leads set by Wales and Singapore.

Messages were read to the crowd from other dignitaries including the Queen; adventurer Thor Heyerdahl, one vice-president of the International Council of United World Colleges; Prince Bernhardt of The Netherlands; Prime Minister Norman Kirk of New Zealand and UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldhiem.

Alex Macdonald spoke to the students as well as guests and delegates saying, "You won't let your teachers tell you what to think. You'll hope they teach you to think for yourself."

Everyone should get the chance they have, he said.

This Douglas fir bole will be displayed at London college headquarters

TAMBOURINES AND GUITARS add to voices singing La Bamba as Pearson College students representing nations from Sierra Leone to Uruguay entertain United World College council delegates and guests at Saturday's official dedication.

Share-the-Wealth Commonwealth Told

LONDON (CP) — Wealthy Commonwealth countries such as Canada must stop trying to enrich themselves further, and instead must help spread the world's resources more fairly among the poor, says Commonwealth Secretary-General Arnold Smith.

In a report to Commonwealth leaders issued Sunday, Smith refers to a widening gap in living standards between industrialized and underdeveloped countries amid a severe international financial crisis.

"This is neither decent nor sane," Smith says.

"If we are to succeed in reversing this dangerous trend, we must abandon the pursuit in advanced societies of ever-increasing material consumption, and must place the emphasis where it belongs, on improving the quality of life throughout the world."

It is Smith's fifth and final report to Commonwealth heads of government, who meet in Jamaica for a week starting April 29.

A Canadian, Smith retires in June after serving 10 years as the Commonwealth's first secretary-general.

While stressing the misery and dangers of persistent poverty among the majority of the world's people, Smith sees some benefit arising from the present problems.

"It is possible that our present troubles, by forcing us to re-examine the traditional assumptions of world economic life, will compel us to do what we have failed to do voluntarily: To reject the habits that have kept the rich relatively rich, and the poor absolutely poor.

"For ourselves, and for the world at large, the Commonwealth can at this juncture be uniquely useful. It would be folly not to use it."

Current declines in trade and aid and international depression may mean belt-tightening in the rich countries.

"But for hundreds of millions of citizens of developing countries, the present crisis is a matter of life and death, of eating or starving."

A Cynical Government Ploy

The provincial government is wrong in its attempt to impose a schedule for debate on spending estimates in the legislature. Under new rules, implemented without discussion by the NDP last week, one minister's spending estimates will be discussed at each sitting for the next 14 sittings. This is clearly inadequate and a cynical negation of parliamentary democracy on the part of the government. That such a measure comes from Premier Barrett, a man who often trumpets his love for the parliamentary system, is even more surprising.

To understand the history of the issue one must go back to the long session last spring when the government limited estimate debate to a total of 135 hours or 45 sittings. While opposition benches agreed on the need to limit long debates they were unalterably opposed to the arbitrary 135 hour figure. Social Credit was so disgusted it refused to vote on the measure. The 1975 spring session marked the first time new limits were implemented. And it was obvious, almost from the beginning of this session, that the opposition was out to embarrass the government on the new limits. Twenty seven hours were spent on the premier's estimates alone, a rather minor department among the 19. After 50 of the allotted 135 hours had been used up only three departments had been considered. Faced with this opposition strategy the government brought down its new rules.

Government spending estimates are an extremely important facet of parliamentary democracy. Each minister's departmental estimates are presented to the house, and the opposition has a chance to question his or her programs and priorities. In a civilized legislature estimates sometimes produce the best sessional debate, not to mention a few revelations the government side would rather not see drawn out. During the current session in B.C. little of the cut and thrust of good debate has surfaced. Rather than tough, specific, well prepared questions, long winded, largely irrelevant speeches by opposition members are the order of the day. Perhaps this has been part of their strategy, faced with limited debate, but the loquacious speeches have produced only boredom to date.

Still, it is not the government's responsibility to tidy up opposition rhetoric. Through sloppy thinking in the first place, the estimate hassle has been allowed to drag on for a year. The issue should be laid to rest as quickly as possible. The first step entails government rescinding its dangerous new limits on estimate debate. Until that happens opposition members have a duty to keep screaming, until they are thrown out of the house if necessary. Then for once, just once, maybe this legislature could solve its procedural bickerings through non-partisan debate and get on with the job of constructively governing and opposing.

" . . . would you like to sign our petition? . . . it's for a better Canadian culture . . . "

Childish Tactics

Those anonymous gremlins who plugged up Saanich sewers and slashed tires on vehicles at the Victoria city works yard (odd how the other party to the festering regional dispute, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, never seems to be harassed by them) struck Friday morning.

They hung bags of garbage—how novel, how cute!—on lamp standards in front of Victoria city hall where usually at this time of year there are baskets of flowers. CUPE denies any responsibility for the dumb stunt. Just as mysteriously, rubbish appears around city hall as soon as supervisory staff have swept it away.

But why the cloak-and-dagger business, driving by at 3 a.m. to festoon the plastic garbage bags on the lamp poles? The ingenious small minds of the people behind it should be swollen with pride at their handiwork. Step forward and take a bow. What next will you surprise us with? Piles of dead rats? Containers of raw sewage? Old mattresses and rusty car bodies?

They're in the same class as CUPE's proposal to warn away tourists who might come to Victoria, that the city is one big pestiferous, rat-infested garbage heap, where the traffic lights don't work and parks and boulevards are dangerous jungles.

While we can't predict the success of CUPE's tourist discouragement project, it doesn't seem likely to keep many people away. The heliport where Victoria's garbage is stored, away from downtown and residential areas, never was much of a tourist attraction. Non-residents come here because they like Victoria's slowed-down ambience, its temperate summer climate, the nearby natural attractions of the Gulf Islands, the rugged west coast—and fortunately, they can't be despoiled by any petty labor-management dispute.

FRANK RUTTER

Will B.C. Secede From Canada?

WASHINGTON — British Columbia and Quebec seceding from Canada, Alaska seceding from the United States, bloodshed as regions of the continent fight over resources. All are possible future scenarios, according to author Alvin Toffler.

"It could happen," said the futurist in an interview here.

"But don't put me down as saying it's going to happen. I speculate. These developments would not surprise me."

Toffler is trying to develop ideas for preventing them, for coping with change which is disrupting the conventional world at an unprecedented rate.

Having shaken up many institutions with his dazzling best-seller Future Shock, Toffler is having a go at the economy in a current book, Eco-spasm.

Next on his list are political institutions. Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, he says, is typical of a new breed of political leaders trapped in an obsolete system which inhibits their capacity for daring.

"I met Trudeau," said Toffler. "He is a highly intelligent guy. He has some understanding that we're in a profound period of change and that there will be fundamental changes in Canadian society down the line.

Trapped in Past

"But he's so busy trying to hold things together — like keeping Quebec. This is true of many intelligent politicians today. There are senators here in Washington — all trapped in dying and obsolete institutions that make certain forms of action impossible to take."

Toffler is working on suggestions for them in a new book on politics. He was in Washington promoting Eco-spasm, which attempts to show that conventional economic models cannot cope with the diffuse and unclassifiable pressure wrenching economies in many, and often conflicting, directions.

Debunking historic concepts of dealing with current problems, Toffler went to Canada for one of many ideas he advocates in his book.

He is enthusiastic about the controversial Local Initiatives Program introduced by the Trudeau government to combat unemployment.

"I used LIP as a model and converted it to use as a way to begin to move employment into the service sector, into human services and particularly those primary services which are neglected and underdeveloped," Toffler said.

His idea is for the U.S. to establish regional service centres where the unemployed would go with their ideas for jobs and receive funds to implement them.

The problem, in short, is attacked from the bottom up, rather than the top down," he says in Eco-spasm. "In the Canadian program, as in any large undertaking, there have been disappointments as well as success. That must be expected in any such effort. But compared with the alternatives, it is a major improvement."

ALVIN TOFFLER
. . . centralization not the answer

Toffler attacks centralization as a dangerous concept in almost any field.

"We tried that — the federal government here did," he said in the interview.

"We brought together the best and the brightest minds, with computers, unlimited technological resources and unlimited intellectual resources.

"And what came out was Vietnam.

"If we try to impose the same thinking, the technocrats will create an economic Vietnam. Eco-spasm is as good a term for that catastrophe as any."

Toffler sees the aspirations, resources and needs of regions as a major pressure threatening nothing but trouble for an overly centralized social political and economic system. He mentioned secessionist tendencies in B.C. as well as Quebec and Alaska as reflecting a desire to accentuate differences from society as a whole in a process of "multiculture" which is inevitable.

"Things could even reach the point of fighting," he said. "I can see the possibility of bloodshed in the long term if we don't recognize legitimate local and state desires — I'm not saying for print that will happen, mind you," he added.

"Attempting to solve problems through a national uniform policy like a tax rebate, is like the doctors at the head of a hospital deciding to give a shot of adrenalin to everybody in the hospital — whether they're delivering a child, treating heart failure or athlete's foot."

In calling for a better balance between national and local planning, Toffler advocated what he calls "anticipatory democracy" — a massive input of local participation in decision-making and a concept spelled out in his latest book.

Citizen Ideas

Such a trend is already under way in a number of states, he said, singling out Hawaii and Connecticut, both of which have established "2000 programs" to solicit citizens' ideas on how their states would look in the year 2000.

At the same time, he advocated the other extreme—transnational planning.

"I can see movements in Canada, the U.S. and Europe toward new patterns, new forms of co-operation and interaction . . . totally different forms of relationships among parts of countries. Maybe we'll need a relationship between Alaska and some part of Africa."

Another example: Toffler foresees independent applications for membership in the European Common Market by Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

"I see not the creation of United Nations or world government, but a network of specialized agencies dealing with the environment, the ocean, outer space, the multinational corporations."

As for the political system to cope with Toffler's new world — that's what he's working on now, to be unveiled in his next book. Asked about the immediate prospects and next year's U.S. presidential election, Toffler merely shook his head.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Crerar Swam Against the Tide

The life of the late Thomas Alexander Crerar (who died here April 11) spanned almost a century, half of it at the centre and pinnacle of events in Canada. But most of the recent tributes paid to his memory by a new political generation which knew him only as a survivor and distant landmark of a time long past, have missed his true significance in Canadian history.

That he alone held senior office in two wartime governments, led his own Progressive party in a clean western sweep, administered many major departments of state and, above all, was trusted absolutely by friends and opponents alike — these facts are on the public record and make it unique.

Another and more significant fact, generally forgotten, will interest historians, if not the present generation, because it illuminates a vast, revolutionary change in the nation's life. It also clarifies the total transformation of the Liberal party which Crerar resisted but could not prevent.

Grimy Struggle

When he joined Robert Borden's government in 1917 to enforce conscription, he represented western Liberalism, a necessary element in the coalition. When the farmers' Progressive party carried 65 seats in the prairie fire of 1921 and made him its reluctant leader, Crerar was still a Liberal of the agrarian left wing in revolt against its eastern right wing of big business.

But he was more than a Liberal in the partisan meaning of the word. He believed in Liberalism as a doctrine beyond the grimy struggle of politics. For him it remained a philosophy, a moral code, an eternal verity, however the Liberal politicians might debase it. So he believed from the beginning of his career to the last day.

That belief sustained the Liberal party, at least as a vague aspiration and ultimate goal, when Mackenzie King first came to power — a belief in the unrestricted competitive market, free trade, financial thrift, a minimum of government, a maximum of freedom for the individual citizen. But the old-time Liberals, Crerar among them, failed to see that by their definition, King was not a Liberal at all.

As his youthful book, Industry and Humanity, showed (if anyone had stopped to read its turgid prose) King was a rebel and a heretic, determined to reverse historic Liberalism. So he did, step by groping step over the next generation until under his contemporary successor, a Liberal government is the biggest, most powerful and costly yet known in Canada, penetrating every corner of the economy and maintaining the highest tariffs in the western world.

While all this may have been inevitable, the natural evolution of society everywhere, it was not Liberalism as Liberals like Crerar and his more famous mentor, the editor, John W. Dafoe, understood it. In a paradoxical sense it was conservatism because it implied an ever-increasing central authority over the private person, even if a Conservative party declared a contrary objective.

THOMAS CRERAR
. . . original Progressive leader

The deceptive labels and contradictory targets of party politics disappointed but did not deceive Crerar. He knew, from the time he entered King's government until his own departure that he was swimming against the tide of history, and the tide was irresistible, in immediate politics anyhow, flowing to ends unknown.

King of course had not released the tide. He had merely recognized and taken it at the flood that led him on to fortune while his enemies, of right and left, were drowning. As a dirt farmer of the prairies, a successful man of business and a student of history, Crerar understood quite clearly what was happening to the Liberal party under King and King's successors. As a practical politician he could not reverse the party's disguised reversal but he could try to keep it within reasonable bounds. This was his real function and the source of his moral influence in King's several governments. He made himself a kind of people's watchdog and ombudsman, seeking the best compromise he could get in the art of the possible.

The compromises rarely satisfied him and when they became intolerable he resigned, first from the Borden government on the issue of the tariff and later from King's on the general issue of the Liberal drift into expanding statism. Other men might be seduced and corrupted by power, Crerar's principles were not for sale.

Liked King

Inevitably he often found himself in conflict with his party leader, respected King's peculiar genius, never broke his confidences but never liked him as a man. He admired Sir Robert Borden, a Conservative, much more and idolized Sir Wilfred Laurier as the greatest of Canadians even when he broke with the old Liberal chieftain on the conscription issue.

These conflicts of politics and personality matter little now that all the men of Crerar's generation are gone. If his Liberal faith is out of fashion, overwhelmed by the tide, that also is only a passing incident of history. Whether he was right or wrong in his judgment — a question by no means answered yet and seldom asked by today's pragmatic politicians — he never doubted the answer in the long aftertime. Humanity, the mass of little, nameless individuals, he felt sure would finally master the giant of the state and retrieve their lost freedom.

Such was the abiding comfort of a man who trusted democracy with all its faults, and the Canadian people with all their mistakes, at the end of a life which he had drunk to the lees, himself not least among his peers but honored of them all.

First-Class Orchestra

We will shortly be leaving Victoria to take up residence in England. One of our greatest pleasures during the three years we've lived here has been to attend performances of the Victoria symphony, many of which have featured some of the world's greatest musical talents. That these artists have made Victoria, hardly a world cultural centre, a stop on their tours seems to suggest that they know they can at least count on a first-class orchestra to complement them, and that Victoria can offer such a first-class orchestra is undoubtedly due to the tireless efforts and the considerable talent of its musical director — Laszlo Gati.

Victoria does little, however, to deserve the distinction of having one of the finest symphony orchestras in Canada. Indeed, considering the inadequate facilities it offers and the appalling financial conditions in which it allows, even seems to expect, its own artists to function, it is amazing that this city is not a total cultural wasteland.

A symphony orchestra, or a theatrical company, is not a business to be manipulated according to tight-fisted economic expediency or small political interests. It is rather a part of our cultural identity, an invaluable asset to the experience of the community in which it exists and which it serves. It should be supported unreservedly without regard for the ledger books rather than suffer the ignominy of becoming a political football or the object of someone's profit-and-loss witch hunt. Artistic excellence is not something that can be bought and sold in the market place. It needs a nurturing climate. Without this it will wither and with its passing something will go out of the heart of Victoria.

Mr. Gati, we thank you for the energy you have put into Victoria's cultural life and for the work you have done to help something beautiful grow and to make this a better place to live. We're still not sure if Victoria deserves you but we're glad to have been here while you were. — Mark and Ruth Walmsley, 1133 Fort Street.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of April 21, 1915

The hearing in an action for $10,000 damages for injuries sustained in a collision between a bicycle and an automobile at the corner of Courtenay and Langley streets in which the cyclist, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Carr, suffered a broken leg and was in St. Joseph's hospital for 23 weeks, was begun this morning in supreme court. Mrs. Carr said she is unable to follow her calling as a canvasser and is also unable to earn anything at her other avocation, that of dressmaking, because she cannot work a sewing maching. The defendant in the case, a provincial road and bridge superintendent named Peter James Campbell denied Mrs. Carr's charges of negligence, and said that she was riding on the wrong side of the street on her bicycle at an excessive speed and did not sound her bell.

Indians Find Soft Appeals Aren't Heard

By DOUGLAS FISHER

OTTAWA — A curious mimeographed letter was stuffed in all the pigeonholes of the press gallery the day Parliament resumed. It was addressed to 20 different MPs, most of whom are active on the House Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The author says that he is an employee of the federal department of Indian affairs. To sign it would jeopardize his job. He is appealing for an investigation of how federal moneys granted to the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs is being spent.

Civil Disorder

He alleges that this union is being financed by the government at the rate of $500,000 a year. Is the money being used to advance civil disorder? He points to three recent incidents sponsored or applauded by the Chiefs: The slashing of the nets of white fishermen from Vancouver Island; the blocking of the Lions Gate Bridge in Vancouver by the Squamish Band of Indians; and a demonstration at Penticton by the Penticton Band, each accompanied by threats of violence and the assertions of Indian land claims.

It has been the practice in the past six or seven years for the federal authorities who deal with Indians to walk very softly and to reply in mild terms to rising Indian militancy, most of the organized forms of which are indeed sponsored by federal funds. Most MPs who have Indian groups of some size in their riding (about 25 or so) are traditionally just as mild, even benevolent on Indian matters.

They have become less paternal and amazingly patient about the now quite serious and wide-ranging claims of Indian bands and most will tell you, much as the unidentified letter-writer puts it, that they "have great sympathy with the cause of the Indians and know they have been treated wrongly in many instances."

Three brief generalizations strike me about the Indian situation.

The first is that something combining goodwill and social guilt has much affected most non-Indians.

Secondly, the Indians have found that modesty and quiet approaches for remedies to their grievances gain them little: Certainly not enough attention. Officially, the consequences of the crasser militancy and the huge sums going into various Indian programs are setting the stage for both a non-Indian backlash and further Indian actions of a shocking, attention-getting, and probably violent nature.

A brief statistical synopsis given the Indian Affairs Committee (printed in issue No. 21 of the committee's proceedings) by officers of the federal department is chilling.

We have 565 Indian bands; there are 2,209 reserves; the total acreage of the reserves is just over 6¼ million — that is, our Indians are scattered to absurdity; of the 275,000 Canadians with Indian status, 170,445 are on reserves; 23,100 are living on crownlands; and 76,943 are living off reserves. The largest numbers living off reserves are in Ontario and B.C.

Birth Rate Rises

Ontario has 60,000 Indians, B.C. 50,000, Saskatchewan 40,000, Manitoba 38,000, Alberta 31,000, Quebec 27,000, the Maritimes 10,000. Another 11,000 live in the Yukon and the Territories.

Although there are regional differences, as a demographic group Indians presently have the highest birth-rate in Canada. That is, those population totals given above are rising, not static.

After a thorough survey, the department tells us that only 15 per cent of this total Indian population is urban; 22 per cent is semi-urban (i.e. living six to 20 miles from a city); and 28 per cent are "isolated," living over 200 miles from a city.

The staggering figures relate to employment. Out of this total population of 275,000, almost 75,000 are potential members of the labor force. That is, that number are aged between 15 years and 64 and might work if there was work for them. In fact, at the time of the survey, only 40,000 were working. That represents over 40 per cent unemployment.

Even more sobering, the data on "man-months in a year" that Indians were employed averages out to 5.5 months.

Of the Indians employed, 2,794 were in agriculture, 4,216 in fishing, 2,251 in forestry, 5,533 in arts and crafts, 1,008 in tourism, 5,506 in wildlife work and 2,837 in something called Indian Community Real Estate. The largest block of those working was classified as "other" work; this is defined as "social services, band management and other social and community work programs."

Let me interpret those employment figures. They demonstrate that the majority of the jobs are provided by bureaucracies related to the Indians themselves, that a huge majority of the jobs are funded or sponsored by federal or provincial programs and that very few Indians, almost a negligible number in relation to their total of 275,000, are gainfully employed in the so-called private sector of the economy.

What the Indian affairs officials were warning the committee about were projections of Indians who will be potentially into the labor force by 1980.

The 1973 potential labor force of 73,000 will grow to 107,000 by 1980, a 46 per cent increase. Even if a level of unemployment as high as 20 per cent were taken as target this would mean the need to create new jobs by 1980 for over 80,000 Indians. If the number of man-months were to be raised to a reasonable figure, say 10 months a year, it would mean the creation by 1980 of over 70,000 man-years of work for Indians.

Work Program

In 1973 Indian Affairs invested just over $36 million simply to create work programs in various activities. This provided merely an estimated 2,500 man-years of work for that year.

The brief report concludes with two headings: General Problems; and Five Problems Inhibiting Economic Development.

Under the first come: high unemployment, low income, low living standard, lack of technical skills, lack of resources, welfare reliance, restricted level of education and lack of mobility.

Under the second heading come: lack of credit, of credit rating, isolation from lending institutions; lack of understanding by Indians of the requirements of business operation, planning and management; restricted development opportunities, particularly in the rural and hinterland regions; the difficulty of many Indian people to accept economic development as the non-Indian society knows it; and the cultural reluctance of many Indians to accept such business principles as incorporation, federal and provincial taxation, etc.

As Mr. Trudeau forecast five years ago, we shall need the patience of Job in the face of the problems we have with the Indians and they have with us. Somehow, both of us have to "hang in there" and not despair. Matters are certain to get noisier and seem even worse before measurable progress in jobs and income and decent living standards are achieved. Perhaps the best test of both sides is whether it can be done over the next quarter century or so without violence.

White-Collar Crime Is on the Increase

By COLMAN McCARTHY
The Washington Post

Anyone who keeps informed of the crime world by what he reads in newspapers must have a feeling in recent months that one kind of criminal is getting out of hand: the white collar criminal. A day seldom passes that another corporation isn't convicted of price fixing, a bank official sent to prison for fraud, a politician found guilty of bribery.

The March 13 New York Times told of a Long Island bank official who pleaded guilty to bribery, a New Jersey real estate developer who had pleaded guilty to bribery, a New York celebrity — Skitch Henderson — who dropped an appeal on his conviction of filing false income tax returns. In addition, 25 New York real estate men were indicted on charges of breaking the rent control law. In Washington, the FTC accused two major land developers of selling worthless or useless property under the guise of homesites.

The day before, March 17, the Wall Street Journal told of an Oklahoma ex-governor who was appealing his conviction in a bribery and extortion scheme, a Nixon campaign worker who received six months in prison for Watergate activities, and two stockbrokers who pleaded guilty to securities-law violations.

Is it only a coincidence that so many reports of white collar crime are appearing? Or is this particular crime rate rising? Evidence suggests the latter.

In the 18 months ending in December 1974, the FBI reports that white collar convictions increased 30 per cent. The length of sentences was up 32 per cent and fines increased 130 per cent. In 1965, losses from bank fraud and embezzlements were $20 million but the figure was $151 million in 1974. Because of such figures, the FBI has been making an effort to enlighten its agents about the menace.

The National District Attorneys Association has begun a white collar crime project funded by a $1.4 million grant from the Justice Department. As for the business community, the Chamber of Commerce is trying to tell its members that the direct dollar loss from white collar crime is not less than $40 billion annually.

The first difficulty is that the victims of white collar criminals often are unaware they even are victims. The citizen who is robbed of $50 by a holdup man on a side-street has had his emotions engaged — fear, anger, perhaps an adrenergic flush for revenge.

But the victim of price-fixing — on food, appliance, beverages, cosmetics, bathtub fixtures, wrist watches or whatever usually has no idea a crime has been committed against him.

A citizen can run to the police station house to report a bank robbery but he has no notion that people behind the teller's window — the dignified bank president, the chief loan officer — may be stealing amounts that a masked hoodlum couldn't haul out in a fleet of wheelbarrows.

According to the Public Citizen's Staff Report on White Collar Crime, frauds and embezzlements have increased 313 per cent since 1969, while bank robberies have increased only 12 per cent.

If the victims of economic, non-violent crime tend to be unaware of what is being done to them, they may also not see as threats to society those who do the victimizing. The corrupted conscience and the socially hostile nature are easily camouflaged by the respectability the community gives to citizens who pursue worthwhile careers, give to charity, attend church and belong to social clubs. This isn't your "criminal class," the thinking goes.

Even after convicted of a crime, some criminals don't see themselves as criminals. Recently, a Long Island judge, after a perjury conviction, told the court: "I can't show any remorse for what I have done because I think that remorse falls to those who truly feel they are guilty. I feel that I am not."

After Rep. George V. Hansen (R-Idaho) pleaded guilty in federal court in February to charges of failing to file a campaign financing report and lying on another that he filed during his 1974 congressional campaign, he was asked if he would resign his seat. Hansen said: "Heavens no . . . I don't think I've done anything to leave Congress for."

Judges can also look at the white collar criminal in ways much different than, say, Nelson Rockefeller looked at drug pushers when he signed a New York law requiring life terms on conviction. A California judge recently sentenced each of eight corporate price fixers to give 12 speeches about their crime to business groups. In an interview with the bureau of National Affairs, Judge Charles B. Renfrew said he was persuaded in the "case that many of the individuals had no idea that what they were doing constituted a criminal act . . . they thought maybe they shouldn't be talking about prices or doing price verification with a competitor, but they really had no idea it was criminal conduct, and that if detected they would stand to be indicted and suffer whatever sanctions that may follow from that. I really don't think they had that intent."

Although the sentence of giving speeches to Rotarians may offend those who believe in strict justice—eye-for-an-eye—the Renfrew decision went to the core of the issue: educating citizens about white collar crime.

In the next few years, we are going to need to know considerably more about the nature of economic crime: the mentality of those who commit it, the feelings of the victims, the ideas of judges, probation officers and politicians.

Tough talk—such as former Attorney General Saxbe's calls for hard sentences for white collar convictions—means little. What needs to be examined, as in any criminal activity, are the reasons that lead people to steal and cheat, all the while maintaining respectability. Is it inevitable that any society will always have its share of well-mannered crooks?

Are we making criminals by the pressures of capitalism, the demands of competition? Is the recession responsible for the increase in white collar crime? Does the example of government lawlessness create situations in which white collar criminals truly don't see their acts as being destructive to the community?

Unlike street crimes, which victimize only a comparative few, many more citizens, often unknowingly, are victims of white collar crime. That alone should be a compelling reason to make it a national issue.

Everyone Needs a Shelter

russell baker

At this time every year, I am conscious of having been swindled by the American educational system, which taught me reading, writing and arithmetic, but no taxes. Taxes ought to be taught from the first grade up with especially heavy dosings during the high-school years, when young people are being pressed to start thinking about careers.

When I was called in at high school to tell the guidance counselor what I wanted to be when I grew up, she never said a word about the tax stupidity of my decison. "I want to become a salaried worker," I told her. "Excellent," she lied. What she should have said was, "Hold on a minute young man. Are you aware that salary income is taxed more heavily than almost any other kind of income in America?"

She didn't, and I have been paying ever since. Why didn't she steer me toward more sheletered income? Why didn't she say, "Go into oil," Or, "I think you can be just as happy, and certainly a lot richer, if you spend your life depreciating office buildings."

There are so many things I could have done instead of this highly taxed salaried work. I could have bought municipal bonds and earned an income that isn't taxed at all. I would have liked that. It sounds like pleasant work. You sit around the office reading Proust and Gibbon and pause every now and then to telephone somebody and say, "I'll take 2,000 of those bonds Milwaukee is flogging for sewer repairs."

★ ★ ★

School, pretending that taxes do not exist, sends us all into the world hopelessly unprepared. Some people catch up. Most don't. Most probably go through life earning salary without ever realizing that they would be far better off financially if they were depleting minerals.

A few years ago, a friend of mine got into cattle. His standard of living had risen noticeably and one day at lunch in a $300 suit he asked why I had my pants belted with a necktie.

With the bill I owed Internal Revenue, I explained, I was lucky to have pants. A belt was out of the question. "Get into cattle " he said.

★ ★ ★

The problem, of course, was that I didn't know how to get into cattle. You can't walk into Abercrombie's and say, "I want to get into cattle." How do yo do it? In school, you are bludgeoned with such information as the perfectly uninteresting fact that nine times nine is 81 and that a spondee is a lot different from a dactyl, but nobody ever tells you how to get into cattle.

I finally met a tax lawyer at a Washington party, which is where they hang out when they are not at the Capitol composing new footnotes to the tax code in demotic Aramaic. "I'd like to get into cattle," I told him. "Forget it," he said. "Cattle was last year's tax shelter. The government has amended the code."

I didn't find out what the new thing to get into was — it was mud turtles, if memory serves — until that, too, had been amended out of existence. The trick about the tax code is that it is constantly being rewritten, but in school they don't teach you how to translate the language fast enough to cash in on the bonanza.

A few years ago, Congress wrote a piece of tax law especially for holders of du Pont stock and made it a very profitable tax arrangement to be a du Pont. If I had been able to translate the thing I could have become a du Pont and scored a big tax saving, but it took me years to puzzle it out. I have always regretted that. It must be pleasant work, being a du Pont, and I would like to have tried it.

My friend who got into cattle at the right time switched to mud turtles, or whatever it was, when the law changed, and is now in foreign oil royalities. I have written Exxon; explaining that I am tired of salaried work and ready for a change of job and would like to try my hand at foreign oil royalites. The only result so far has been a series of mailed press releases from Mobile Oil warning that Congress is trying to impoverish the oil industry.

Meanwhile, my friend has quit taking me to lunch and inviting me to his house. "I'm sorry," he said, "but the tax law won't permit me to keep you in my life. Since we have no business relationship, I can't get any tax saving by claiming you as a business deduction."

★ ★ ★

He was on his way to depreciate an office building when we had our farewell talk. It sounded like hard work, but he was ebullient about the amount of taxes it would out from his bill.

"How do you depreciate an office building?" I asked. "Do you tackle it room by room, or do you decreciate the whole building at once?"

He smiled secretively. "You must have spent a lot of time in school," he replied walking away.

"Get into mollusks," he said, with a final wave.

If I had become a du Pont when the opportunity beckoned, I would now probably know how to act on his tip.

Jail Term Now Near Certainty On Second Breath Test Offence

OTTAWA (CP) — More than 100,000 Canadians have been convicted of impaired driving since the breath test ballooned into one of the country's toughest laws five years ago.

It's getting even tougher. First offenders, among them prominent politicians, lawyers, doctors, even judges and policemen, face an almost certain jail term if convicted a second time.

A recent Supreme Court of Canada decision makes it difficult for judges to escape imposing the mandatory jail term for a second offence.

In New Brunswick, judges have been asked to jail rather than fine first offenders. About 25 per cent of 282 offenders were jailed in 13 municipalities there in the first quarter of 1975.

Maximum penalty for the initial breath-test conviction is three months in jail and a $500 fine. However, few jail sentences have been imposed and fines for first offences are generally near the $50 minimum.

The Criminal Code says second offenders must go to jail for at least two weeks and third-time offenders for at least three months.

The Supreme Court ruled recently that judges no longer can escape imposing a first conviction by giving the offender a conditional discharge — meaning second offences were treated like first ones and no jail sentences were imposed.

Judges must follow the letter of the law and its spirit which is unquestionably tough. Justice Minister Otto Lang said last week he won't do anything that might even imply the government was softening the law.

Drinking drivers are held largely responsible for the 5,000 deaths each year on Canadian highways, a record which makes impaired driving 10 times deadlier than murder in Canada.

Court decisions, plus toughening public attitudes, may mean some rude shocks this year for prominent citizens who so far have had to cope only with fines. They include a former provincial premier, a city solicitor, a judge, and the managing editor of a daily newspaper leading a crusade against drunk driving. All face at least two weeks in jail for a second offence.

Nova Scotia, cracking down hard on drinking drivers, keeps detailed figures that suggest judges somehow have avoided jail sentences for repeaters.

Last year 338 second offences and 44 third offences were recorded in the province but only two jail sentences were imposed. The rest, along with 2,667 first offenders, were fined.

All 396 persons convicted of impaired driving were fined, although 64 were second offenders and five were third offenders.

Five years earlier, when the breath test had just become law, 40 of the 3,000 Nova Scotians convicted of impairment were jailed.

Indications are that at least 125,000 persons have been convicted since the breath test became law in December, 1969.

Canadian figures show 13,554 convictions in 1970, 24,234 in 1971, and 27,502 in 1972, when 5,801 convictions for refusing to take the test were imposed. The penalty for refusal is the same as that for impairment.

CBC Reporting 'Irresponsible' Reynolds Says

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Conservative MP John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) Saturday accused the CBC of "totally irresponsible" reporting after a CBC television report said there was only one British Columbia Tory MP in the commons Friday afternoon.

Reynolds, here with 11 of the 12 B.C. Conservative MPs to attend a two-day provincial caucus meeting, said the report implied that the members were neglecting their duties.

"I think that kind of reporting is totally irresponsible," Reynolds said.

The CBC should have said where the MPs were, he claimed.

He will raise the issue in the House on Tuesday, he added.

Reynolds said CBC reporters are never in the House except during the question period, adding if the reporters wanted to know where the MPs were, they should have asked.

George Whittaker (PC — Okanagan Boundary) said one of the duties of elected members is to go out and meet people.

Whittaker, deputy Western whip for the Conservatives, said B.C. MPs spend more time in the House and in committee meetings than their counterparts from other provinces.

While the Conservatives were here, B.C. Liberal MPs were attending a similar caucus meeting in Terrace.

The Conservative MPs arrived here Friday.

Carnival, Violence In Italy

ROME (Reuter) — Thousands of Italians marched through the streets Sunday to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the fall of Fascist dictator Benito Mussolini as a wave of political violence swept the country.

The celebrations brought a carnival atmosphere to most major cities, but in the preceding four days, clashes between left-wing extremists and police have left three persons dead and more than 200 injured.

The fighting followed mounting Fascist activity, which left-wing parties and much of the press claim has gone virtually unchecked by police. Last year more than 20 persons died in bomb attacks attributed to Fascist guerrillas.

With Sunday's celebrations, leftists prepared to bury their dead in funerals that might provoke more violence. Thousands of mourners filed past the coffin of a 17-year-old university student, Claudio Varalli, murdered Wednesday by an alleged neo-Fascist in Milan.

In the Sardinian city of Cagliari, seven rightists were arrested during the night after firing at a group of leftists from a car. A young leftist was taken to a hospital with gunshot wounds.

Sex-Case Return Unlikely

Times News Services

It is unlikely that Harry Carignan, convicted of sexual assaults in the Minneapolis area, will be returned to B.C. to face trials on assaults and murders committed here, according to RCMP in Vancouver.

The 47-year-old man was found guilty Friday for a second time of sexual assaults in Minneapolis and faces possible further prosecution and a maximum 40-year sentence.

Staff Sergeant Fred Bodnaruk, who visited Minneapolis last October and talked to police there, said Carignan is suspected in a March 1973 rape and hammer beating of a Vancouver woman and may be involved in several interior B.C. sex slayings.

Meanwhile, a frightening list — the number of young women missing or murdered in Washington state over the last 16 months — has reached 11.

The latest victims, two friends on a three-day hitch-hiking and camping trip, were found inside a makeshift driftwood shelter along the beach a mile north of Moclips.

Tina Jacobsen, 19, and Gaelisa Burton, 18, partially clothed with their hands tied behind their backs, had been stabbed to death.

Because the bodies discovered Friday were just inside the boundary of the Quinault Indian reservation, FBI agents entered the investigation along with Grays Harbor county sheriff's deputies.

Over the weekend a coroner's report said the women had been killed with a knife or similar weapon at least 48 hours before their bodies were found by a couple walking along the sandy beach.

Investigating officers declined to speculate on whether the latest deaths were connected to the slaying or disappearance of nine other women in the state.

The two women left on the trip last Monday. Miss Jacobsen was due at work at Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle Thursday morning and friends reported them missing Friday just hours before their bodies were found.

ALASKA FERRIES FEARS EASED

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Bud Drury, federal minister of public works, has expressed confidence that Alaska Ferry Services' lease problems for its terminal property here can be resolved.

A spokesman for the ferry line said last week that the company was considering a move to Bellingham, Wash., because of problems getting land for expansion.

Drury said in a weekend interview that the land sought by the ferry line is owned by Canadian National Railway which also wants the land for future development.

The minister said what the ferry company wants "is practicable and we should be able to revise their current lease to provide for them."

The railway, which has property adjoining that currently leased by Alaska Ferry Services, had plans to twin its tracks in the area but Drury said the railway will be asked to develop another area of its property so the ferry company will not be restricted in its expansion.

"They are operating in the 15th or 16th year of a 20-year lease and want an extension for an additional 25 years prior to going to the expense of construction," the minister said.

Watergate Figure Links CIA to Kill-Castro Plot

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Convicted Watergate burglar Frank Sturgis says he plotted to assassinate Fidel Castro in 1959 while working with the CIA but dropped the plan after failing to get the "green light" from Washington, the New York Daily News reported Sunday.

Sturgis, who served 15 months in prison after pleading guilty in the Watergate conspiracy, first went to Cuba in 1957 at the urging of Cuban exiles in Miami who supported Castro against Fulgencio Batista.

The News said Sturgis worked as a gun-runner for Castro and, within months, was recruited for intelligence work by Park Woolam, then in charge of the U.S. consulate in Cuba.

After Castro rose to power, Sturgis became intelligence chief of the Cuban Air Force.

A self-described Mata Hari, meanwhile, was quoted by the News as saying she lived with Castro for four months in 1959, plotted his assassination and filched paper from him for the CIA.

The News said in its Sunday editions she returned to Havana on a mission with the help of convicted Watergate burglars E. Howard Hunt and Sturgis.

Some of the documents were said to contain original plans for Soviet missile sites in Cuba.

News reporter Paul Meskil identified the woman as Marie Lorenz, daughter of an American woman and a German ship captain. He gave the following account of her activities:

Castro came aboard her father's ship in 1959 in Havana Harbor and asked the 18-year-old to become his secretary. She was then held for four months as a virtual prisoner in the suite Castro occupied at the old Havana Hilton and once was confined in a cell for a week.

Sturgis, then known as Frank Fiorini, a Castro confidant secretly working for the CIA, met her.

"Frank said: "Get all the data you can,' and I did," she said. "I was a regular Mata Hari."

When she became ill, Sturgis arranged her escape. But early in 1960, she returned while Castro was elsewhere. Clad in the olive-drab lieutenant's uniform which Castro gave her, she slipped through the Hilton lobby and up to the deserted suite.

With a key, she entered, grabbed documents and caught the next plane to Miami, where she gave them to Sturgis.

Wagner Hits Foreign Policy

OTTAWA (CP) — Despite some positive aspects, federal foreign policy has beeen ineffective, nondescript and, at times, a sham under the Trudeau government, front-bench Progressive Conervative MP Claude Wagner said Sunday.

Speaking on the CBC program Nation's Business, Wagner said that foreign policy since 1968 has been little more than an updated version of "the selfrighteous and isolated" view of the world Canada had in the 1930s.

He was particularly critical of Canada's abstention last fall when the United Nations voted to hear a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"I don't think that a middle-of-the-road position on international lawlessness or human rights is the Canadian way," he said.

The PLO, recognized by some countries as the government of Palestinians living as refugees in various Arab nations, has claimed responsibility for numerous guerrilla raids and attacks on Israelis.

GOLD SWINDLE HITS 10,000

CHICAGO (AP) — About 10,000 investors smitten with the desire to own gold may have been swindled out of $1 million in savings in the last few months, the U.S. Security and Exchange Commission (SEC) says.

Among potential losers are a Chicago school teacher who spent $2,000 on "a good deal," an elderly man who invested $1,800 as a "hedge against inflation," and a River Forest man who spent $5,500 in "a good investment," the Chicago Tribune said in its Sunday editions.

The "good investment" was made in the U.S. Bullion Co., which is known in Atlanta and some other places as U.S. Bullion Inc. or U.S. Gold, the SEC said.

U.S. citizens have been able to own gold legally only since Jan. 1.

Last week U.S. District Judge Joel Flaum in Chicago issued a temporary restraining order against U.S. Bullion based on SEC findings that the company never owned more than 200 ounces of gold, while selling 6,000 certificates for gold concentrate for $1 million. Gold concentrate is gold which still contains dirt and rocks.

The SEC charged that the company solicited sales by saying it had its own California gold mine but neglected to tell customers its Gold Lake Mining Corp. operated out of a Beverly Hills home, had no mining experience and had gold concentrate that could produce no more than 200 ounces of bullion.

But action by the SEC and Judge Flaum may be too late. Telephones at company offices in a luxury building in Chicago and company headquarters in Atlanta have been disconnected.

The SEC named the company's head as Harold Goldstein, released from prison in November after conviction on three counts of mail fraud while head of Golstein, Samuelson Inc.

That company, once the world's largest commodity options firm, went bankrupt involuntarily in 1973, owing its customers $80 million.

Weekend Accidents Claim 4

At least four persons died accidentally in British Columbia during the weekend, two in traffic accidents, one in a fire and one by drowning.

Ruth Gould, 60, of Duncan was pronounced dead on arrival at Nanaimo Regional Hospital after she was involved in a two-vehicle collision late Saturday night about nine miles west of Parksville.

Peter Cote, 19, of Smithers died Saturday when the car in which he was riding plunged into the Bulkley River, 15 miles east of Smithers.

Kathleen Ramlo, 65, of Vancouver, died in a house fire Saturday. She is Vancouver's third fire victim this year.

The body of Elsie A. Popowich, 62, of Surrey, was discovered Sunday at Crescent Beach. Surrey RCMP said the woman was believed to have drowned Saturday.

Quick Bounce Suits Moose

By The Canadian Press

Defenceman Andre (Moose) Dupont of Philadelphia Flyers can't see any reason for playing hockey games for which he won't be paid.

Anxious to save the Flyers from expending any extra effort in the Stanley Cup playoffs, Dupont scored in the second minute of overtime Saturday night to give the Flyers a 4-3 win over Toronto Maple Leafs and a sweep of their best-of-seven quarter-final series.

"We don't get paid playoff money by the game," said Dupont. "So why take this thing back to Philadelphia.

"They tell me we can win the Stanley Cup in 12 games too. That's all right with me."

Toronto's elimination left seven teams in the National Hockey League playoffs, but New York Islanders, Vancouver Canucks and Chicago Black Hawks all trail 3-1 in their series and could be eliminated Tuesday.

The Islanders, inspired by a pre-game pep talk by coach Al Arbour, beat Pittsburgh Penguins 3-1 Sunday afternoon to keep their hopes alive.

Buffalo Sabres crushed Chicago Black Hawks 6-2 Sunday night at Chicago and Montreal Canadiens blanked Vancouver Canucks 4-0 at Vancouver on Saturday night.

Some of the Islanders may have had doubts about their playoff futures before Sunday's game, but nobody left after Arbour's pre-game lecture, reported by Islander veteran J. P. Parise.

"He said, 'If anybody here doesn't think we can win this series, please just take your stuff off and go now,' " Parise recounted.

Billy Harris set up the winning goal for the Islanders in the third period.

An abortive Montreal line change gave the Canadiens the chance they needed to break a scoreless tie early in the second period at Vancouver.

Guy Lafleur was supposed to go to the Montreal bench with his linemates but turned around and went in to score.

"I was going to the bench when I saw Yvan (Cournoyer) and he had the puck, so I just went behind the defenceman," Lafleur said. "I was all alone."

He waited for Vancouver goalie Gary Smith to make a move and went the other way and tucked the puck into the vacant goal.

Cournoyer, Peter Mahovlich and Serge Savard scored later goals for the Canadiens, who were outshot 37-24.

Quarter-final action resumes Tuesday with games at Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Montreal.

Gilbert a Free Agent

NEW YORK (AP) — Is there a pro hockey team interested in an all-star right winger? If so, Rod Gilbert is available.

Gilbert, the 33-year-old veteran who collected 97 points for New York Rangers this season, has become a free agent and is available to the highest bidder, it was learned Sunday.

"Yes, Rod Gilbert is a free agent," admitted Rangers president William Jennings. "He is a free agent because of the 'consent decree' signed with the World Hockey Association 1½ years ago." The so-called consent agreement in effect did away with the option year of a pro hockey player's contract.

Jennings would not confirm that the Rangers had made an offer to Gilbert, who has played with New York for the last 13 seasons and was their first player to score 800 career points. Gilbert is said to be after a four-year contract with a raise from his reported $175,000 annual salary. Sources said, however, that the Rangers' response was an offer of a three-year agreement and no raise.

"That information should come from general manager-vice-president Emile Francis," Jennings said.

Jennings did not refer to Francis as coach, a job he has held for the last nine seasons — during which the Rangers have got ineo the Stanley Cup championship playoffs and been eliminated each time.

WEARY: Buffalo Sabres' goalie Gerry Desjardines grimaces as he removes mask after his team's 6-2 National Hockey League playoff win against Black Hawks Sunday night at Chicago. Sabres struck for five goals in final period to take 3-1 lead in best-of-seven series. (AP Wirephoto)

Winning Car Is Finished Just in Time

The 1975 stock car racing season opened Sunday at Western Speedway and Bill Price made it just under the wire.

A half-hour before the 1 p.m. start of the time trials, he and his crew of Dave and Harry Bickerdike, Jim Rankin, Terry Kershaw and Charlie Price were putting the finishing touches on his new 1964 six-cylinder Chevelle.

Three and one-half hours later, Price wheeled the car into the victory circle after winning the season's first super stock feature before a crowd of 2,483. He took the lead on lap 2 and held it for the remaining 28 laps.

"We worked until four this morning on the car," Price said after the race. "We got a couple of hours sleep and came back this monring. We finished up about 12:30."

Price and his crew began working on the new car after selling his 1969 Chevelle to Rocky Collins at the conclusion of last season's racing.

But without a sponsor to help purchase the needed $5,000 in parts, it was slow going in the shop out at Metchosin.

It was anything but slow out on the Western oval Sunday, however. Chased most of the race by Neil Montgomery, Price stayed ahead until Montgomery blew an engine on the final lap.

That enabled Al Wade to finish second but Price was still a car length ahead when the checkered flag came down. Tony Johnston finished third with Bob Collins fourth and Phil Filopovic fifth.

Montgomery wasn't the only driver to come to grief Sunday. Only three of 12 starters in the 12-lap claimer feature finished. Most of the field was knocked out in a ninth-lap pileup that began when leader Dave Ireland lost a wheel and nearly flipped.

That left Rick Haskell and Ernie Choor to battle for first placer and Haskell won it after coming out ahead in a brief tangle with Choor on the final turn.

Philip Delesalle has added another feather to his gymnastics cap.

The 16-year-old Victoria athlete, Canadian junior champion in 1973, earned selection to the six-man national team during the weekend in Canadian Gymnastics Federation competition at Toronto.

Turning in a sparkling display before the selection committee, Delesalle missed first place by a narrow margin.

Out in front was Keith Carpenter of Winnipeg with a total score of 54 for the six events. Delesalle was second at 53.8 and Masaaki Naosaki of Toronto finished third with 53.4.

Joining Carpenter, Delesalle and Naosaki on the national team are Glenn Butler and Bill Mackie, both of Vancouver, and Bruce Medd of Ottawa.

Comeback Eyed By Stottlemyre

DETROIT (UPI) — Mel Stottlemyre, considered finished and therefore released by New York Yankees earlier this spring, has come to Michigan for an arm examination he hopes will permit him to resume his pitching career.

Stottlemyre, 33, wants to be reunited with his former manager of the Yankees, Ralph Houk, now manager of Detroit Tigers.

If the examination determines that pitching will not further damage his bad shoulder, then Stottlemyre will attempt a comeback.

Royals Prove Pitching Is 80% of the Game

By The Associated Press

Kansas City Royals have the best won-lost record in major league baseball and manager Jack McKeon says pitching is the reason.

The Royals won their fifth game in a row Sunday when they blanked Texas Rangers 2-0 in an American League baseball game, improving their record to nine wins and two losses, the best start in the club's seven-year history.

Despite Sunday's win, the Royals, lead in the West Division was cut to 1½ games when Oakland A's swept a double-header from Minnesota Twins, 4-1 and 5-1.

In Sunday's other A.L. games, California Angels trounced Chicago White Sox 8-4, Boston Red Sox walloped Baltimore Orioles 10-2, Cleveland Indians downed Milwaukee Brewers 7-4 and New York Yankees whipped Detroit Tigers 7-1.

In Saturday's games, Milwaukee shut out Cleveland 3-0, California edged Chicago 6-5, Detroit topped New York 8-3, Oakland stopped Minnesota 4-1 and Kansas City overcame Texas 5-2.

A game at Boston between the Red Sox and Orioles was postponed because of rain.

In the National League Sunday, New York Mets swept two from Chicago Cubs, 8-6 and 4-3; San Francisco Giants beat Los Angeles Dodgers 6-3 in 13 innings; Atlanta Braves edged San Diego Padres 4-3; Pittsburgh Pirates blanked St. Louis Cardinals 5-0 and Cincinnati Reds downed Houston Astros 5-3 in the first of a doubleheader but dropped the second 7-6. Philadelphia Phillies' game against the Expos at Montreal was postponed because of cold weather.

Saturday, the Cubs defeated the Mets 4-2, the Phils shut out Montreal 3-0, San Diego beat Atlanta 8-2, Cincinnati shaded Houston 9-8, the Pirates took the Cardinals 7-1 and the Dodgers edged the Giants 3-2.

"Nobody can match our five starters," said McKeon after Sunday's Kansas City game. "They might match us 1 and 2 but not five-deep.

"We're winning with good pitching and that's 80 per cent of the game. We're not tearing the cover off the ball. We're just playing solid, consistent, aggressive baseball.

The Royals' starters are Steve Busby, Paul Splittorff, Fitzmorris, Nelson Briles and Bruce Dal Canton.

Kansas City got its runs in the second inning against Texas' Steve Hargan, who matched Fitzmorris' six-hitter. Hal McRae doubled, George Brett walked and Fred Patek, hitting only .179 entering the game, tripled.

Dave Hamilton, brought into the game in the first inning when starter Mike Norris hurt his elbow, combined with Jim Todd on a seven-hitter and pitched Oakland to a double-header sweep. Glenn Abbott stopped the Twins with a six-hitter in the opener.

Luis Tiant allowed four hits, including home runs by Bobby Grich and Lee May, and the Red Sox capitalized on Mike Torrez' wildness. Torrez gave up five hits, walked eight, three two wild pitches and balked home a run before giving way to Wayne Garland in the fourth. He was charged with seven runs.

Home runs by Tom McCraw and Rico Carty and Frasnk Duffy's two-run single sparked the Indians, who scored five times in the second inning.

New York scored six runs in the seventh inning against rookie Vern Ruhle,, two on Ed Herrmann's tie-breaking pinch double and three on a homer by Ron Blomberg, and defeated Detroit behind Rudy May's three-hit pitching. Bobby Bonds homered for the Yankees' first run.

The erratic Dave Kingman, acquired this past winter from San Francisco Giants, won one game for the Mets with his bot but almost lost it with his glove.

Kingman hit his fourth home run of the season in the second game to help New York take a 4-0 lead.

Then in the ninth Kingman let a bases-loaded single get him for an error and all three runs scored to cut the Met's margin to one run.

Oak Bay Aides Enjoying Life in Open

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Mike Parker and Doug Mahovlic don't mean to be disrespectful to their boss, but Paul Trapp will have the Victoria Golf Club pro shop to himself for at least one more Sunday. And possibly two ...

The Oak Bay assistants are enjoying playing in the CFAX Vancouver Island Open championship.

The fun is in winning.

They assured themselves of another Sunday away from the shop with a pair of impressive, home-course victories in the second round. Located on opposite sides of the draw, and playing well, it's possible they could meet in the 36-hole final on May 4.

The 26-year-old Parker knocked off medallist Gord Rands of Cedar Hill, two up, while Mahovlic defeated two-time champion Norm Boden of March Meadows on the 20th.

Also joining the assistants in the quarter-finals were Bill Wakeham of Cowichan, Mike Gray of Uplands, Don Gowan of Glen Meadows, 15-year-old Jim Rutledge of Cedar Hill and Uplands, Earl Davies and Grant Milliken, both of Gorge Vale.

At the same time, Ken Morgan of Cedar Hill and seven Gorge Vale members — Tom Murray, Al Robertson, Ron Maxwell, George Carlow, George Murphy and Lex Sutcliffe — moved into the eights of the handicap division.

Both the quarter-finals and semi-finals will be played next Sunday at Royal Colwood.

Parker was the only golfer to turn in a sub-par performance Sunday. He carded an approximate medal of 69, one under par.

But of the 69 strokes he took, the one Parker remembers best was a chip-in on the 15th hole.

"That was the shot that made it for me," said Parker.

In danger of losing a one-up advantage, Parker sank the chip for a par and a half. Rands came right back with birdie three on the 16th but Parker birdied the 17th and won the 18th with a par.

JIM RU[illegible] reaches quarter-finals

Mahovlic had to work overtime for his decision over Boden when the Honeymoon Bay professional squared the match with a dramatic 40-foot birdie putt on the 18th.

Mahovlic seemed to have victory in his grasp on the first extra hole but missed a four-foot birdie putt. That sent them to the second extra hole, where Mahovlic lost a semi-final battle to Uplands' Bob Hunt last year.

Mahovlic, 22, ended the match by sinking a nine-foot birdie putt.

Rutledge, the city junior champion, also had to go an extra hole to upset Uplands assistant pro Bryan Carbery. Three down after eight holes, Rutledge relied on some strong putting "and some breaks" to defeat Carbery.

Wakeham, a four-time winner of the Island title and now the heavy favorite this season, was one over par for the 15 holes required to defeat Gorge Vale amateur Jeff Jones, 4 and 3.

Milliken played to par to defeat another assistant, Bruce Rands of Cedar Hill, 5 and 4.

Davies, the 1970 winner who meets Rutledge next Sunday, scrambled strongly to defeat Terry Maxwell; Gray eliminated southpaw Bob Beauchemin while Gowan beat Ted Langlois.

Maureen King and Gary Day relax after winning Times Trophies in rolloffs

King, Day Top Bowlers

By DOUG PEDEN
Times Sports Editor

Prospects of success appeared considerably different for Maureen (Mo) King and Gary Day before they started firing Sunday in Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs that concluded tenpin competition in the 12th annual Victoria Times Bowler-of-the-Week event.

Former provincial champion and twice winner of the city women's crown, Mo had become a part-time, sore-handed bowler during the past season and she entered Sunday's three-game rolloffs with a swollen, aching finger.

On the other hand,, Gary had a busy season, competing in three leagues during his fourth year of tenpin action. His closest approach to bowling glory was a second-place finish two years ago in a 10-game marathon at Port Angeles and he stepped into the rolloffs at Mayfair Lanes without pains or problems.

By the time the last pins had toppled, the two Victorians could find some remarkable similarity.

Each had captured a Times Trophy as a rolloff champion, each had failed to mark in only two frames, each had a scare in the closing stages before nailing down the title, and, as non-subscribers, each missed out on the $100 bonus prize that goes to any rolloff who is a daily subscriber to the Times.

Maureen fashioned a 608 series for a 19-pin victory in the women's division while Gary had a tougher battle in the men's section, winning by four pins with a 612 total.

Troubled by a bursitis-like condition in the knuckles of her bowling hand and having become involved in curling, Mrs. King was only an occasional bowler during the winter.

One finger was swollen and sore Saturday and that resulted in some consolation for Keith Snelling, who never got things going Sunday and finished 10th in his bid to become the first two-time male winner of a tenpin rolloff title.

Snelling played a part in her triumph by enlarging a finger hole on her bowling ball Sunday morning, and, said Maureen, "it felt just great."

Away to a great start with 220 in her first game, Mo followed with a 201 count and appeared in command through the final game until missing a simple, single-pin spare in the ninth frame before finishing with a spare and nine-count for 187.

"When I missed that spare, I thought Marlene was going to win it," Maureen said later.

The "Marlene" was Marlene Mitchell, who was in contention after games of 212 and 188, but could manage only 189 in the third game for 589 and second place.

Tied for third were Loreen Reid and Judy Soyka at 549, a single pin ahead of Vera Gibbons.

Tied for third place after firing 212 in his first game, Day moved ahead with 201 in his second game and closed with 199 after two 10th-frame strikes.

"My timing has been off lately," he said as he accepted the Times Trophy, "so I slowed down my approach and reached out a little more.

"And it worked."

Putting two strikes together six times but never able to hit a three-timer, Gary was also sharp in shooting at spares. Splits produced his two open frames, one ending his first game and the other, which almost cost him the victory, arriving in the ninth frame of the final game.

By that time, big Norm Hinds was charging and in position to take it all.

Open on his first two frames, Hinds had a first-game 184, followed with 188 and then staged a remarkable run down the stretch.

Norm started his final game with five straight strikes, picked up a pair of 3-10 splits as he added three spares and a strike, needing only a pair of strikes in the last frame to beat Day, who, by this time, was a spectator.

Hinds got one strike, then his big hook came in high, leaving him with a split and a 236 tally for a 608 series.

His 236 was the day's top single-game score, barely beating Frank Miller's first-game 235.

Brian Grexton was third at 599 with Bill McKay (574) and Dave Michell (572) next in line.

Fivepinners, also with 26 eligibles in each of the women's and men's sections after qualifying by winning weekly awards during the 26-week Bowler-of-the-Week contest have their turn in the rolloff spotlight at Town and Country Lanes next Sunday staring at 1 p.m.

Strategy Works, Boxers in Final

By D'ARCY KAVANAGH
Times Staff

London Boxing Club's game stragety worked perfectly Sunday and as a result the team will meet Victoria West in the Jackson Cup soccer final next Saturday at Royal Athletic Park.

Employing a stingy defence and a hard-running offence, the Boxers downed University of Victoria Vikings 1-0 in a Cup semi-final at Athletic Park.

Vic West advanced to the final by trimming Nanaimo City 4-1 Saturday at Athletic Park.

The Jackson Cup winner will move into a Province Cup semi-final May 3 against the Fraser Valley champion at Athletic Park.

The other provincial semi-final will take place in Kelowna the same weekend between the Okanagan champion and the B.C. Soccer League winner.

Boxers, first in the premier division of the Vancouver Island Soccer League, deviated from their usual short-pass attack in the first half and used long kicks in a bid to tire UVic, premier division playoff champion.

Neither team scored in the first half as much of the play was at centre field.

Boxers' plan, however succeeded in the second half. The Vikings' offence slowed and the usually tight UVic defence sagged as the Boxers reverted to their short passing game.

After several excellent scoring chances, Boxers finally broke the scoreless deadlock at the 66-minute when international Bob Politho connected on a 20-yard drive after a pass from Dean Stokes.

Boxers maintained pressure on the UVic goal the remainder of the game but Viking netminder Mike Armstrong stopped all threats.

Kjeld Brodsgaard earned the shoutout for the Boxers.

The winners received a scare late in the final half when international Brian Robinson was carried off the field with a twisted right knee. He was walking after the game, however, and is expected to play in the final.

Steve Forslund scored three goals to pace Vic West, fourth in the premier division. Robbie Williams added the other Vic West goal while Ike MacKay scored the lone Nanaimo goal.

In second-division play Sunday, Labatts captured the Knockout Cup by defeating Royals 3-1 in the final at Henderson Park.

Barry Goodson sparked Labatts with two goals with Bruce Propp adding the other. Arthur Smith scored for Royals.

London Boxing Club edged Da Vinci 6-5 on penalty shots Sunday to capture the third division championship at Topaz Park. The score was 1-1 after regulation and 2-2 after 30 minutes overtime. Boxers outscored Da Vinci 4-3 in the penalty session to take the title.

Strike Leader Out of Pack

TENNIS DEMANDS OLYMPIC BERTH

MUNICH, Germany (UPI) — Walter E. Elcock, the president of the International Lawn Tennis Federation, Saturday demanded the inclusion of tennis in Olympic competition.

Elcock said the demand was one of the topics of a two-day meeting of ILTF's committee of management.

Elcock said he would meet International Olympic Committee president Lord Lillanin in May to discuss the issue. Elcock said he also was planning to bring up the problem in talks with WestGerman's International Olympic Committee vice-president Willi Daume at the July 9 ILTF general assembly meeting in Barcelona.

Elcock said ILTF would also be backing continental amateur tennis championships to whip up support for the organization's demand for recognition as an Olympic sport.

Fans Rip Up Barriers In Worst Soccer Riot

LONDON (AP) — Soccer fans ripped wooden safety barriers apart with their hands Saturday and battled police with improvised clubs in some of the worst violence seen at British stadiums this year.

At Notts County's ground at Nottingham, Manchester fans went wild when their team clinched the English Second Division championship with a 2-2 tie. Dozens were injured and carried off on stretchers in fighting which followed the final whistle.

Thousands swarmed onto the field. Manchester fans ripped huge pieces of wood from safety barriers and swung them against the police.

They demolished a 15-foot wall, then tore out seats and smashed windows. Police moved in with dogs. They broke up groups of fighting fans and arrested 40. Ambulance men could not find enough stretchers to carry the injured.

More than 600 police were on duty to greet the Manchester United fans. Fights began near the railway station when the Manchester contingent arrived in the town.

The Manchester brigade, keyed up for the big game, met Nottingham Forest fans who were leaving for a game at Norwich.

Fighting broke out in the streets. Police arrested 30 people and 10 of them, all Manchester supporters, were detained in jail.

At White Hart Lane Stadium in London, thousands of rival fans swarmed onto the field and fought among themselves before the Tottenham Hotspur-Chelsea game.

Police charged them with batons, cleared the field and the game started a few minutes late.

Optimists Tops In Minor Soccer

PORT ALBERNI — Victoria Evening Optimists captured the Division IV title in the Island juvenile soccer finals here Saturday by defeating Port Alberni Colson-Prescott 1-0 on a goal by Geoff Courtnall.

Two other Victoria teams shared titles.

B.C. Land of Victoria battled to a 3-3 tie against Alberni Athletics in Division VI while Victoria Evening Optimist Golds tied 1-1 with Duncan Fraser Construction in the Division VII final.

B.C. Land marksmen were Rob Wallace, Bob MacDonald and Don Hammock while all three of Alberni's goals went to John Coney.

Evening Optimist Golds' goal was scored by Joe Nemeth with Brad Alexander replying for Duncan.

'Caps Win Opener

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps won their North American Soccer League season-opener Saturday night, defeating Chicago Sting 1-0 before a crowd of 10,007.

The Whitecaps outshot the Sting 34-14 and relied on steady goaltending from Peter Greco for the win.

Rookie Sergio Zanatta scored Vancouver's goal at the 26-minute mark of the first half.

The Whitecaps played without captain Billy Stevenson, out with a twisted knee. Stevenson is due back next Saturday night when Vancouver is host to Seattle Sounders.

Swetnam, Hill Win In Tennis

Al Swetnam and Jack Hill won the Labatts Polar Handicap doubles tournament, first tennis event of the season at the Racquet Club of Victoria.

Playing in tricky winds, Swetnam and Hill defeated Don Cameron and Gordon Harwood 31-22, 31-24.

The women's event was won by Betty Moss and Leslie Thorburn who downed Bernice Fleury and Merle Hayes 31-27, 31-30, the last match requiring a tie-breaker.

Fred Seger and Shirley Malysheff topped the mixed event by defeating Don Maxwell and Barb Crisp 29-31, 31-23, 31-27.

LANGLEY CONVINCING CHAMPION

PORT ALBERNI — Langley left no doubt about its claim to the B.C. high school seven-aside rugby championship Saturday.

Langley swept through its preliminary round undefeated, then thumped defending champion Delta 24-0 in the semi-finals and whipped Port Coquitlam "A" 24-6 in the final.

Port Coquitlam, a 14-0 winner over Centennial of the Fraser Valley, finished second in the 10-team tournament. Delta beat Centennial 13-4 for third place.

Alberni "A" missed the playoffs when it was upset 13-0 by Delta and finished with a 2-2 preliminary-round record. Other schools in the tournament were South Delta, Alberni "B", Kamloops West Side, Kamloops and Port Coquitlam.

Arnie's Eagle Settles It

LA MANGA, Spain (UPI) — Arnold Palmer eagled the final hole Saturday to win the $67,000 Spanish Open golf championship by one stroke.

It was a typical charging Palmer finish as he came from behind to defeat South African John Fourie. The $9,000 first-place money was the first winner's cheque Palmer has picked up since he won the Bob Hope Desert Classic in 1973.

Fourie, who finished several minutes before Palmer, parred the 72nd hole to leave Palmer one stroke back.

But on the par-five last hole, Palmer hit a magnificent drive and then a four-iron to within seven feet of the pin to set up his eagle putt.

KINGSTON Jamaica (CP) — Danish players won the men's and women's singles titles in an international badminton tournament Saturday.

Sandra Falters But Still Wins

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Sandra Palmer, her precision game faltering just slightly, held on Sunday and captured the $200,000 Dinah Shore Winners Circle golf tournament which she had led from the start.

The diminutive Texan, who came into the final round of the four-day event with a total of 210 after three consecutive 70s, finished with a one-over-par 73 on the 6,347-yard Mission Hills course for a 72-hole total of 283, five-under-par. That gave her the $32,000 first prize in the richest women's golf tournament ever played.

Miss Palmer bogeyed the final hole of the tournament Sunday when she missed a birdie putt of about six feet, then was unable to make a comeback putt of less than two feet. But that still was good enough for a one-stroke victory over Kathy McMullen.

Challenges came from Miss McMullen, who surged up with a record 66 Saturday, and from Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., who was within a stroke after the first and second rounds. But Miss Palmer was in command throughout the tournament.

In addition to her first prize, Miss Palmer also collected $3,000 for leading after each of the first three rounds.

Miss McMullen, playing in the same threesome as the winner, finished second at 284 after a final round 71. Tied for third were Japan's Chako Higuchi, Carol Mann and Carole Jo Skala, each at 287. Miss Bourassa, who fell completely out of contention when she bogeyed three holes in a row on the back nine, wound up at 289.

Miss Bourassa's closing 75 was good enough for $4,825 in prize money. Sandra Post, a native of Oakville, Ont., living in Florida, also had a final-round 75 for a total of 292 and $2,500.

Canada Must Wait

MONTREAL (CP) — Although tickets for various Olympic events are on sale in other parts of the world, Canadians will have to wait another three months for a chance to obtain tickets for the 1976 Summer Games' biggest spectaculars — the opening and closing ceremonies.

The organizing committee for the Games and the T. Eaton Co., the Canadian ticket agency, are in the process of deciding how tickets for the ceremonies will be allotted.

It has been decided that Canada's allotment of approximately 35,000 public sale tickets will be decided by lotteries, which may be held July 17, exactly one year before the Games are scheduled to open.

"We are still working on the details," Ken Parmer, recently appointed director of spectator services, said.

"But it won't do people any good to submit their entries before we've announced the details," he added.

Tickets, including those for the two ceremonies, went on sale last Tuesday in most of the world outside Canada and the United States, where sale of tickets for the individual Olympic sports events will open May 5.

Vikings, JBAA Rally to Victory

James Bay Athletic Association, the first division champion, and University of Victoria Vikings, the divisional runner-up, both had to stage rallies Saturday to advance to the playoff final.

James Bay, unbeaten in league play this season, fell behind 10-0 to Oak Bay Wanderers during the opening minutes of their semi-final at Macdonald Park before tying the score prior to half time and going on to a 38-10 victory.

In Duncan, Vikings trailed Cowichan 12-7 at the break. Doug Archibald scored a try and Alan Ress kicked the conversion with five minutes remaining to give the UVic side a 13-12 decision.

The other two division finalists were also decided at the weekend.

UVic Norsemen tripped Cowichan 15-6 and Nanaimo Hornets trounced visiting Saanich Velox 21-4 in second division semi-finals on Saturday.

On Sunday, Cowichan "B" defeated Velox 14-6 in overtime after the sides had battled to a 6-6 deadlock in regulation time and James Bay Athletic Association nipped Cowichan "A" 19-14 after nearly blowing a 19-0 half-time lead in third-division semis.

In exhibition matches, Ebb Tide of Victoria topped Whoi-Whoi of Vancouver 14-4 in an over-40 match Sunday and Reigate Grammer School of England blanked Cowichan Under-19 23-0 Saturday.

Both Ebb Tide and Whoi-Whoi will be playing the touring Fuwaku Club of Japan. The Victoria match is scheduled for 7 p.m. next Monday.

The Reigate victory completed a five-match unbeaten tour of the province.

Island I topped Burnaby 8-3 and lost 2-1 to Vancouver I in Sunday matches of the round-robin affair in which a winner is not declared.

On Saturday, Island I edged Okanagan 3-2 and bowed 2-1 to Vancouver II.

India Club Takes Title

India Club of Vancouver downed the Falcons of Tsawwassen on penalty shots in the final of the fourth annual Vancouver Island Men's Field Hockey Association seven-a-side tournament Sunday at Lansdowne Junior High School.

The teams, which won division titles in the round-robin portion of the two-day tournament, were tied 1-1 at the end of regulation time and played through a scoreless overtime session. India Club scored on three of the seven penalty shots while Falcons connected on only two.

Seven teams from Victoria and 10 from the Greater Vancouver area took part in the competition.

BILLIE JEAN 'CHEATED' IN NET FINAL

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Chris Evert, winning a third-set tiebreaker, beat arch-rival Billie Jean King 4-6, 6-3, 7-6 Sunday and won first prize of $50,000 in the $100,000 World Series of women's tennis.

It was the largest winner's cheque in women's tennis history.

Mrs. King was leading in the final set 6-5 when a disagreement erupted over whether Miss Evert's first return of service was good. Mrs. King claimed the linesman had signalled first that the ball was out, and then changed his hand signal to indicate it was in.

Mrs. King said she was the angriest she has ever been in her life over a tennis match and added that as far as she was concerned she was cheated out of the match.

Late Rally Gives Jerry First Win

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Jerry McGee, recovering from a collapse on the first nine, fired a closing round 70 Sunday to capture the first tour victory of his career, the $125,000 Pensacola Open golf tournament, with a 13-under-par 271.

McGee, a 31-year-old with a chronic back ailment, had fallen three shots behing second-year pro Wally Armstrong at the turn but strung together three birdies beginning with No. 10 and pushed himself into a two-shot cushion on the par-three 16th with another birdie.

The victory qualified McGee for next week's Tournament of Champions in California and also for next year's Masters.

Meanwhile, the quiet, 29-year-old Armstrong saw his hopes of winning his first tourney fizzle with consecutive bogeys zt 16 and 17.

Australian Bruce Crampton, winless in the last 22 months, also moved into contention before fading in the final round on the 6,679-yard, par-71 Pensacola Country Club scourse.

Crampton at one point joined McGee and Armstrong in a three-way tie at 12-under-par, but he fell away with a bogey five on the 363-yard 15th.

Lee Elder, who used his victory here a year ago as a stepping stone to the first appearance by a black in the Masters, had a closing 70 and finished in a six-way tie for tenth at 277.

Ben Kern of Toronto, the only Canadiaan in the tournament, dropped out Friday after failing to make the second-round cut.

ORIOLES MAKE TRADE

BALTIMORE (AP) — Catcher Earl Williams, 26, has been sent by Baltimore Orioles to Atlanta Braves in exchange for minor league baseball pitcher Jimmy Freeman and an undisclosed amount of cash.

Why the incredible Alfa Romeo is credible for the family man.

Today's Alfa Romeo incorporates everything for the family man who wants more than transportation. The 2000 series comes in three models. For the driver who needs maximum space there's the 2000 Berlina, a superb road car with impeccable race breeding, indisputable handling qualities and the comfort of a family sedan. Those who like fresh air will go for the 2000 Spider, one of the last high-performance 2-seat convertibles at an affordable price. And the 2000 GTV makes an ideal touring car for a young family. Every model is the right answer for someone.

Every car maker in the world tries to build a car as perfect as time and money permit. Few succeed as well as Alfa Romeo. Its race-refined suspension and power-assisted 4-wheel disc brakes count a lot because you can't always count on the weather, the road or the other guy. Its smooth, easy to use 5-speed transmission coupled to a powerful aluminum, 2-litre, dual overhead cam, fuel-injected engine gets you to 60 mph in less than 10 seconds. As well, every Alfa Romeo delivered to Canada comes equipped with a limited slip differential that greatly improves traction on gravel, sand, snow and ice. It's a must for rallyists. This feature, plus Alfa Romeo's excellent weight distribution, and radial tires, means that many Canadian drivers will never need snow tires.

Alfa Romeo's are as beautiful to live in as they are to drive. Seats are firm and beautifully contoured for soft support. Operating controls are fashioned from the finest stainless steel, trim is genuine mahogany. And everything, including the trunk, is covered with thick carpeting. An all-weather heater/ventilation system and fully reclining front seats are also standard equipment.

Owning an Alfa won't ruin a family budget either. With a 60-year reputation to protect, Alfa Romeo doesn't cut corners. Every part of an Alfa engine is examined before assembly begins. And a further 32 inspections are made before that engine goes into a car. Alfas are not products of computer-planned, highly-mechanized production lines. They're designed, built and inspected by people.

The Alfa Romeo Spider, $8,195.00, Berlina sedan $6,855.00, GTV coupe, $7,995.00.†

Walton Puts Whalers Out

By The Canadian Press

After sweeping the first-ever World Hockey Association playoffs in 1972-73, New England Whalers are having problems making it past the first round.

The Whalers rolled over Ottawa Nationals in the quarter-finals, Cleveland Crusaders in the semi-finals, and beat Winnipeg Jets in the final — all by 4-1 counts in games — back in the league's inaugural season.

Last year, New England lost to Chicago Cougars in the seventh and deciding game of the quarter-finals. Saturday night, the Whalers were defeated 6-1 by Minnesota Fighting Saints, sending New England to an early vacation.

Mike Walton scored three goals to lead the Saints past the Whalers and a victory edge in the best-of-seven quarter-final.

Minnesota goalie John Garrett, who blanked the Whalers 4-0 Friday night, missed another shutout when New England's Mike Byers slammed in a rebound from close range with just over eight minutes left in the game.

The win sends Minnesota into the semi-finals against the Nordiques at Quebec.

The game was the only league playoff action on the weekend.

NEXT STOP: LOUISVILLE

Jockey Jacinto Vasquez asked Foolish Pleasure for all he had in the stretch run of the $120,400 Wood Memorial on Saturday. Foolish Pleasure answered with a victory in the final strides and now it's on to the Kentucky Derby.

"I asked my horse for it, and he had enough to get up," said Vasquez after the Derby favorite rebounded from the only defeat of his career, a third in the Florida Derby, by winning the Wood by a head over front-running Bombay Duck.

"We'll ship down to Louisville on Tuesday, right to Churchill Downs," said trainer Leroy Jolley after Foolish Pleasure's stretch duel at New York's Aqueduct.

Elsewhere on the U.S. racing, Laffit Pincay Jr., rode the favored Diabolo to a 4½-length victory in track-record time of 1:46 3-5 over 1⅛ miles in the $100,0000 California Derby at Golden Gate Fields in Albany, Calif.

Pincay's mount, a son of Damascus, moved into the lead as the field of seven three-year-olds came off the final turn, and won going away. George Navonod was second.

The winning time broke a record wich had stood for 25 years at the Northern California track, a 1:46 4-5 by Irishbred Noor.

Diabolo, owned by Frank McMahon of Vancouver, will make his next start at the Kentucky Derby.

No Blanks for Bullets With Hayes at Trigger

By The Associated Press

Elvin Hayes poured in 46 points Sunday, his career high in National Basketball Association playoff competition, as Washington Bullets edged Buffalo Braves 97-93 for a 3-2 lead in their best-of-seven Eastern Conference semi-final series.

In a Western Conference semi-final game Sunday, Chicago Bulls routed Kansas City-Omaha Kings 104-77 for a 3-2 advantage in their best-of-seven series.

In the other semi-finals, Boston leads Houston 2-1 in the East following the Rockets' 117-102 triumph Saturday and Golden State and Seattle are tied 2-2 in the West after th SuperSonics' 11-94 victory Saturday.

In the only American Basketball Association action of the weekend, Denver stopped Indiana 131-128 Sunday in the first game of their West Division final.

Hayes connected on 19 of 26 field goal attempts and added eight free throws in outscoring Buffalo's Bob McAdoo, who had wrecked the Bullets with 50 points in the fourth game of the series. McAdoo, the league's scoring champion for the second consecutive year, scored 34 points.

Chicago parlayed Bob Love's 30 points and an air-tight defence in crushing the error-prone, poor-shooting Kings. The Bulls held Nate Archibald, the Kings' high-scoring guard, to 13 points, well below his average. Archibald hit only four of 16 shots from the floor.

Bob Fortune's Inside Forecast

On Saving Energy With Insulation

Bob Fortune.
British Columbia's well known TV weatherman.

Insulation: a wise investment in future savings.

Installing proper insulation in your home is one of the very best ways to cut heat losses, reduce heating costs and conserve energy. What's more, when you consider rising fuel costs, an investment in insulation today can be returned many times over in years to come.

There's no question, if your house is not insulated, you're paying far too much for heating—simply because much of the heat is being wasted. Or, if you have some insulation, but not the optimum amount, adding more insulation can still make a big difference to your heating costs—and to the amount of energy your heating system uses.

"R" Values: the best way to measure insulation.

At one time, the amount of insulation was usually expressed in inches of thickness. But as new insulation materials were developed, "R" (resistance) values were adopted as the standard measurement of a material's resistance to the passage of heat, applicable to all types of insulation, regardless of form, shape or content. The higher the "R" value, the less heat will escape through the material. To achieve an insulation resistance of R-20, for example, requires either 6 inches of glass wool batts or 9½ inches of glass blowing wool or 3½ inches of urethane foam.

There are many different kinds of insulating material available: cellulose fibres, polystyrene and urethane (rigid or foam), and of course, glass wool in batts, rolls and loose fill. Keep in mind, one material may have a higher "R" value per inch of thickness than another, and one form of a material may have a different "R" value than another form of the same material.

Attic insulation: for best results, start at the top.

Since heat rises, the attic is naturally the greatest single area of heat loss in your house and should be given top priority when installing insulation. For this area, B.C. Hydro recommends enough insulation to achieve a value of at least R-20, either as loose insulation poured by hand or mechanically blown into place, or as batts placed between the ceiling joists.

When you use energy wisely, you save a lot more than you think.

B.C. HYDRO
CUSTOMER ADVISORY SERVICE

Walls and floors: important parts of the insulation system.

B.C. Hydro recommends an insulation rating of at least R-12 for walls and for floors above unheated areas. In most cases, a proper level of insulation for floors can be achieved with little difficulty—glass wool batts in the ceiling of an unheated basement are installed fairly easily. Concrete basement walls can be readily insulated before finishing with rigid insulation or glass wool batts as interior insulation, or with rigid insulation outside the walls. To properly insulate basement walls, however, the interior or exterior insulation must reach from the top of the wall down to at least 24 inches below ground level.

For older houses with uninsulated exterior walls, there are now effective methods of blowing certain kinds of insulation into the walls from the outside through small holes drilled into the cavities between the studs.

No matter where you wish to install insulation in your house, it's always a good idea to talk to a qualified insulation expert first. Proper installation is essential and involves data relating to vapour barriers, ventilation and many other factors. Further information can be obtained from your local contractor or through the Customer Advisory Service of B.C. Hydro.

Because insulation reduces heat losses, it's an excellent method of conserving energy in the home. When you look around, you'll find that energy conservation doesn't take much effort, but it can mean more than you think—to your budget, to your environment, to your future.

That's what's such a shame about wasting energy: you're wasting much more than just your money.

True or False . . . No Grey Areas With Lie Detector, Says Mountie

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Canada's senior Mountie in the use of the polygraph says this crime-fighting device was slow in coming but now it's here to stay — and you can run that statement through the lie detector if you want to.

Vancouver-based Sgt. Larry Proke is confident that the future for lie detectors — they have been in fairly common use in the United States for more than 50 years — is secure.

The reason is simple. It's a first-class aid to police investigation, says Proke who supervises the Mounties polygraph program in Canada.

In general, he said in an interview here, Canadian peace officers have been cautious and even skeptical of the lie detector's potential. But that attitude is changing. Now they are trying to catch up on something which for years they've gone without.

Since Proke joined the 10-year-old RCMP polygraph unit in 1971 the workload has mushroomed. When he started there were just three officers doing the work across the country. Today there are nine — three in B.C., one each in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

Although the RCMP provide the service free, some municipal forces have formed units if their own. Vancouver City police has had one since 1966 and now has three examiners. The Calgary force has an examiner on staff, Edmonton has two, Regina one, and St. John N.B. has a man in training.

Outside of the Canadian Armed Forces which has five examiners, the CPR police which has one, and about half a dozen private polygraphists in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, no one else is engaged in the field in this country.

It's a far cry from the machine's widespread use in the United States, where there are at least 5,000 examiners.

For the private polygraphist it is a lucrative business. In the U.S. where lie detectors are used extensively in pre-employment screening and employee checks, an examiner can earn anywhere from $100 to $400 for an average two-hour test.

Proke disdains the use of the lie detector in situations other than police investigation. That's its first and best use, he says.

A test can save hundreds if hours of ponderous plodding by investigators, he says, and the results are uncannily reliable, exceeding a 90 per cent accuracy rate.

Although the $2,200 machine, which is about the size of a small suitcase and weighs about 15 pounds, is popularly called the lie detector the name is something of a misnomer. Its main function is not so much to detect a lie as it is to eliminate truthful people from a policeman's list of suspects.

Thus its scientific name — polygraph, meaning "many drawings" is more apropos. The machine in current fashion records four graphs which measure changes to a subject's respiration, perspiration and heart beat as he undergoes questioning.

Tests are strictly voluntary, follow a set routine and are conducted only upon the authorization, in this province, of RCMP chief superintendent Mark Marcus.

First there is the pre-test interview, generally lengthy session wherein the examiner tries to determine the subject's basic health, explains the working of the machine, and reviews in detail the questions to be asked.

"There is no sense giving a test to a subject who has a heart condition or a bad cold or flu," says Proke, "because the results on the graph would be distorted."

Similarly the mental state of the subject has to be carefully considered.

"The results will show not necessarily what the truth is but rather what the subject believes the truth to be. If, for example, he is a schizophrenic and believes devoutly he is Napoleon, the graph will show he is responding truthfully when we question him about it. In such cases we stop the test then and there."

Composing the questions to be asked is an art in itself. The examiner goes over the list with the subject to ensure there is no misunderstanding. The response must be a simple yes or no.

"Did you kill Sally Smith?", "Were you in the store at the time of the murder?", and so on.

"There can be no element of surprise in the questions because what we are recording are emotional changes. The four emotions, love, hate, fear and lying all look the same on the graph. The purpose of the interview is to eliminate the first three and concentrate on the last one — lying."

Before the test begins a blood pressure cup is wrapped around the subject's arm, two rubberized chains are snapped around his chest and metal plates attached to two fingers on one of his hands.

The actual test is short. Generally it's over in 15 minutes.

The questions are posed a minimum of three times. Then the examiner analyses the charts, compares reactions and comes to some sort of opinion. Only rarely are the results "indefinite" necessitating a re-run at a later time. Most often it is clear — the subject is either truthful of deceitful.

"There's no grey area," says Proke who has conducted more than 500 tests.

The subject is always advised of the results and if there has been a deceptive response indicated on the graph the examiner quizzes him about it.

"We're not out to convict anyone," says Proke, "and it's nonsense to consider the machine will ever supplant the judge and jury system."

He's loath to see polygraph results being used as evidence in the courts. He notes, however, there are no stated cases in Canadian law on whether a polygraph finding is acceptable evidence or not.

It hasn't been tried here yet, although in the United States if the prosecution and defence counsel agree, results are admissable in some courts.

"We try to stay out of the courts," he says. "After all, it is really up to the police officer to get the hard evidence needed to support a charge."

For Proke and his small band of examiners the polygraph is simply a valuable investigative aid. Nothing more. Nothing less.

Sgt. Proke ready for test

Happy With Nothing: Is This the Answer?

Since I first met Harry Cannon a dozen-odd years ago I've been convinced that he is one of the few truly happy men I know. Now I'm not too sure.

The question is: can a person live only for himself and claim happiness? I'll tell you how he looks at things and perhaps you'll give me your views.

First of all, Harry Cannon isn't his name. But that's what we'll call him here. All the rest is fact. He is a man of not more than 50, somewhat stout, ruddy-faced with a bulbous nose. He is a good-natured man, quick to laugh. I like him very much.

Harry lives aboard his boat and makes a living by a bit of cod-fishing and a bit of beach-combing, picking up logs that have broken from booms. Every once in a while, usually after a storm such as we had on the Easter week-end, he comes into our bay to look for tide-beached logs and rows ashore for a beer.

When this happened a couple of days ago I manoeuvered the talk around to a philosophical discussion about how to get the most from life.

"You seem to be a genuinely happy man, Harry," I said. "What's the secret?"

And Harry, becoming quite serious, began to talk.

"I'm a happy man," he said, "because I've limited my possessions to things that are absolutely essential. I've my boat and a change of clothes and some canned food in the locker and a bottle of Irish whisky and that's about all I own or want to own."

★ ★ ★

"You think, then, that the trouble with people is that they want too much?"

"They want too much and they have too much," Harry said. "Their lives are cluttered by possessions. Each one is a burden." He glanced back at our house. "There's your burden," he said. "You've a house and it's full of objects and you are responsible for each of them."

"I'm human," I said. "I like comfort."

"You buy comfort only by a loss of freedom," Harry said. "Every piece of furniture, every dish, every radio or TV set or record player, every so-called labor-saving device, is an extra burden on your shoulders. People are burying themselves, smothering themselves, under inanimate objects."

"It's an interesting point," I conceded, "but a man needs these things when he's raising a family. Have you ever had a family?"

"I never have, thank God," Harry said. "When I was a young man I came close to being trapped many, many times. The shadow of the altar loomed over me constantly. But every time I was tempted I would think to myself, 'Harry,' I'd think, 'guard your freedom.' What is a wife, what is a family, but more possessions to interfere with your independence?"

★ ★ ★

"I think you confuse independence with selfishness, if you'll forgive me," I said, boldly.

"All people are selfish," Harry said. "Everybody's out to get what he can while he's passing through. What I've got is my freedom. I walk alone and I like it."

I considered this for a minute and said, "I've thought a good deal about this, Harry. But the trouble with being independent is that it also means being lonely. There's a price to be paid for every attitude, isn't there?"

"Maybe so," Harry agreed. "But a man who is self-sufficient, as I see it, has the best chance for happiness. You said I looked like a happy man. Why? Because down deep you envy me. I'm like the birds. I go where I please. I don't have to do The Right Thing. I've nobody to please, nobody to hurt. I owe nobody and nobody owes me."

"And this boils down to rejecting possessions?"

"It does," said Harry. "I'll give you an example. A friend of mine at Comox gave me a pup, a wonderful, purebred collie. I called him Frisky. I had him for a year and he was a great pal. Then he took sick from eating something on the beach. He died. It upset me more than I can tell you. That's the way it is. Everything you own brings you pain in the end."

He finished his beer and said goodbye. I watched him row out to his boat and then chug out across the bay and around the point. And I went back to my possessions, my burden, my responsibility, and found them strangely comforting.

RCMP Counter Gem Smugglers

A rising tide of jewel smuggling into Canada has triggered some intensive countermeasures by the RCMP.

Three members of the RCMP's customs and exise squad in B.C. have just returned from a week-long course in Toronto aimed at countering the trend.

The three, two from Vancouver and one from Victoria, received special training in the identification and detection of precious stones and metals. Twenty officers from coast to coast attended the study session.

Chief Superintendent Mark Marcus said the training was necessary to combat an alarming increase in the incidence of smuggling into this country.

He said the force has developed new methods of detecting smugglers, but declined to elaborate.

Marcus said several substantial seizures have been made in recent months in Vancouver — on the average about one a week involving thousands of dollars worth of jewelry and precious metals.

The majority of smuggled jewelry appears to be coming in from Switzerland and the Orient, he said, where it is obtained from legitimate sources. Often the jewelry is alleged to be heirloom pieces.

He said the influx in smuggling was in direct proportion to the increasing number of Canadians travelling abroad who are tempted by bargain deals in foreign countries.

It's a lucrative business.

For example, Omega watches which sell here for $500 can be bought in Switzerland for $80 to $90, and sapphires can be bought in Sri Lanka for only a fraction of the cost in Canada.

But it's a case of buyer beware.

"The purchaser better know what he's doing . . . he could end up discovering his so-called Omega has a Timex workings, or his sapphire is nothing more than a piece of glass."

Marcus does not feel the increase in smuggling is connected with organized crime but rather the work of independent operators.

"Of course, once they arrive here they have to get rid of the goods and then there has to be a certain amount of organization in fenoing them off.

"Sure it's tempting . . . but the penalties they face if caught make it hardly worth while."

Gov't Firefighters Try Arbitration

The 1,400 firefighters employed by the federal government have taken their contract dispute with the Treasury Board to arbitration.

The firefighters, members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, are seeking a 30 per cent pay raise at all levels, elimination of the first job classification level and changes in hours of work and vacation pay.

There are about 140 government firefighters in Victoria, employed at HMC Dockyard and Victoria International Airport.

The firefighters' contract expired March 31 and the first hearing before the three-man arbitration board was held April 16.

The firefighters have the right to strike.

Meanwhile, about 35 firefighters employed by the provincial government have been ordered by the B.C. Labor Relations Board to stop any picketing activities at three locations around the province.

The firefighters, members of the trades and crafts component of the B.C. Government Employees Union set up picket lines March 17 at the University of B.C. endowment lands area, Riverview Hospital at Essondale and the Tranquille School in Kamloops.

The picketing continued until April 10, the date of the Labor Relations Board hearing, but during the time when picket lines were set up, the firemen continued to respond to all emergency calls.

LRB vice-chairman Ed Peck said in his decision on the case that the firefighters' picketing activity was brought about by 'deep-seated dissatisfaction and . . . generated by great frustration."

In the hearing, the firefighters claimed that because of the special services they provided, they should be a separate bargaining unit within the BCGEU, not lumped in with the 1,700-member trades and crafts group.

The firemen contend that they are considered public servants when it comes to bargaining a master agreement, but they would be considered the same as the Council of Lower Mainland Firefighters, if they ever went on a full strike and would probably be legislated back to work.

The firefighters said their picket lines were for information only, which is allowed under the Labor Code, but Peck ruled the picket lines were illegal.

He also ruled that the firefighters were rightly included under the trades and crafts component and said he presumed the legislature had already considered the possible ramifications of including the firefighters in a union which has the right to strike.

TV AUCTION NETS $14,000

About $14,000 raised by a television auction Saturday will go to Kiwanis charities in Victoria.

Auction chairman Ken Kenyon today said more than 300 items were donated by Victoria businesses.

Ten telephones rang from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. with bids for the all-new items which included furniture suites, television sets, car accessories and trips to other Canadian cities.

The money will go toward such Kiwanis projects as Windward Village, a new senior citizens' complex in Sidney.

Cost Sharing Of Trial Urged

Greater Victoria School District superintendent Jake Longmore will propose tonight that the school board ask other B.C. boards to help pay costs of an upcoming court trial.

The trial will be held on an injunction granted March 25 by B.C. Supreme Court Judge R. A. Wootton limiting picketing at Victoria public schools.

The injunction was directed at striking school custodians, members of Local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, who returned to work two weeks later.

The action Longmore is recommending is that the school board ask the B.C. School Trustees Association for financial assistance to offset the trial costs for the Wooton injunction.

The results of the trial will affect every school district in the province, he said in his report to the April meeting of the board.

Central to the trial will be the question of whether sections of the Public Schools Act, which guarantee that children must be provided with education, take precedence over sections of the Labor Code.

In granting the injunction, Wootton said it is "most desirable that a trial on this matter be heard."

If the court finds the Public Schools Act does take precidence, other school boards could use the decision in dealing with strikes.

The trial is not expected to begin for many months.

FRAMED IN CRANEWORK, work on the 633-foot Swedish roll on-roll off container ship Paralla began today at Esquimalt. Prefabricated sections of an extra deck will be put in her forepeak to allow her to carry ore and other concentrates, as well as her usual oil and other liquid cargoes. Similar conversions will be done by Yarrows shipyard on her sister ships, the Allanga of Britain and the Dilkara.

Police Catch 12-Year-Olds

Two 12-year-olds were caught by police breaking into Glen Lake Service Station, 2712 Sooke Road, early Sunday morning, Colwood RCMP said today.

On routine property check at 2 a.m. police noticed a smashed front window at the service station.

The juveniles were caught inside.

Charges have been laid in juvenile court.

Holdup Try Investigated

Victoria police today were investigating an attempted armed robbery which occurred Saturday evening at the Crest Motor Inn, 455 Belleville.

Hotel manager William Andison refused to give details of the incident.

Pet Doctor Dies at 79

Jesse W. "Doc" Smith, Victoria veterinarian for 25 years, died in North Vancouver Friday.

The 79-year-old vet of 3015 Craigowan died of emphysema at the home of his physician son Verne.

For many years the only pet doctor in town, he moved to Victoria in 1944 and set up practice in Esquimalt.

He is survived by his wife Anne and other son Ronald, of Victoria.

Smith designed and built the Oak Bay Pet Clinic and later worked from a clinic in Sidney.

Also a community worker, Smith was a YMCA director for many years and helped start the Esquimalt Ratepayers' Association.

He was active in Esquimalt Boy Scout work, an alcoholic rehabilitation program and Kiwanis Club school safety patrol.

Fish Union Denied Ministry Meeting

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union has been denied a meeting with Ministry of Transport officials to discuss safety regulations on fishing boats.

The union asked for the meeting after 13 men died and 12 boats were sunk or capsized in B.C. waters during the herring season which started March 16.

Transport Minister Jean Marchand replied by telegram to the union's meeting request, saying an MOT investigation on the sinkings is already underway. A union spokesman said no mention was made of the proposed meeting and apparently union officials are dissatisfied with the reply.

The MOT investigation is expected to be completed late this week. The three investigators working on the problem will then return to Ottawa to draw up their report.

Mushy Valentine Bounces Back

DEAR ABBY: My husband sent a mushy valentine to a girl, and on the bottom of it he wrote: "I love you, Baby!"

He must have put the wrong address on the envelope because it came back with "ADDRESS UNKNOWN" on it.

Naturally I was curious when I saw this big, fancy looking envelope addressed so some name I had never heard of in my life, in my husband's handwriting, with his return address on the back, so I opened it, and when I saw what it was, I nearly fainted!

Should I confront him with it, or forget it?—Brooklyn Wife.

DEAR WIFE: Forget it. If "Baby" thinks he forgot her on Valentine's Day, it might be the beginning of the end. Which would be better for all three of you, since he's married to you.

DEAR ABBY: Someone once asked you what could be done about retrieving gold teeth, crowns, inlays, etc. from one who has died instead of just burying them, because gold is so valuable these days. Your answer was that few people have sufficient gold in their mouths to justify leaving it to heirs.

Well, I have a friend who has a pawn shop, and he says that some morticians in town bring him gold inlays, crowns, fillings, etc. that add up to quite a bit.

I am not interested in the money being lost by my family from the gold in my teeth (of which I have a considerable amount), but what can be done to protect the dead?

When a body is in the coffin, it's unlikely that a member of the family would check to see if the teeth are intact.

It is not a pleasant thought that when one is dead and helpless, a mercenary person might take advantage of the situation.

Can anything be done to prevent this from happening?

Wondering.

DEAR WONDERING: The only protection against such an unthinkable bit of petty thievery would be to select a reputable mortician. (Of all the morticians I queried — and there were many — none had ever heard of anyone who had been guilty of such a ghoulish deed.)

Good Bread Is Key Item In Lunchbox Nutrition

By HILDA BEASTALL

Portable lunches are no longer carried only by youngsters travelling great distances to school. They are prepared too by many a single-parent family to ensure high nutrition for children at mid-day when the one parent is of necessity absent from home.

School lunches served in cafeterias have been under such severe criticism for their non-food value during the past years that improvement in quality will no doubt result.

Basically though, as with most reforms, it remains with parents to see that their children get the kind of food required by growing bodies and developing minds to remain healthy and active.

The most sensible and the cheapest way to do this is to prepare all meals at home, whether they are carried in a bag or eaten at home. Staple foods cost much less in bulk than in single prepared servings in packaged form.

Since sandwiches are the basis of most carried lunches, be sure to use good bread. This does not necessarily mean the most advertized bread nor the highest priced bread, but it does mean a bread made from flour not refined of all the germ and the bran. The long-term cost will be less because of less quantity needed. With good bread a little goes a long way. It is satisfying to the appetite.

If you can occasionally make bread yourself you soon see, taste and feel the difference. A Batter Bread as given in this column on April 9 is a good one to begin with, full of flavor for cheese, egg or fruit sandwiches. It is made even richer in nutrition by using all whole wheat flour in place of part unbleached.

With bread as the basis of the noon meal the sandwich fillings must be ample yet easily handled. Some moister fillings are better packed into small sealed containers and eaten with a spoon with the buttered homemade bread or homemade buns.

For most normal appetites be fairly generous with the butter or margarine, or mix with peanut butter as a spread. This mixture goes remarkably well with cheddar cheese and fruit.

Sandwiches packed and chilled (including the lunchbox if used) remain fresh longer than when they leave home at room temperature. In fact, freezing overnight is not such a bad idea, for they will thaw gradually before lunchtime.

Savoury loaves cooked one day for supper in a double size or two smaller sizes, make good sandwich fillers for a couple of following days. On one day use chopped parsley and chive stems as seasoning; the next day, chopped celery leaves. These loaves soon become more popular than the old fashioned and never-much-liked meat loaves.

To keep sandwich fillings from seeping moisture through the bread, spread the butter or its substitute, well to the edges and corners and fill the holes or depressions.

Here are two savoury loaf recipes, using different ingredients but similar enough to show how the homemaker can improvise delicious and highly nutritious fillings for sandwiches.

The same recipes make wonderfully tasty supper dishes, served hot or cold with a couple of vegetables one of which can be small baked potatoes cooked in the same oven with the main dish. Place the potatoes in the hottest spot and get them heated through before temperature is up to the needed cooking point of 177 or 190 deg. C. Then the potatoes and loaf are ready at the same time.

PEANUT LOAF

1 cup chopped raw peanuts.
1 cup cooked brown rice
1 cup wheat germ.
1 tbsp. chopped onion.
1 tbsp. chopped parsley.
½ tsp. salt.
2 eggs beaten.
1 cup water or vegetable stock.
½ cup soy flour.

Heat oven to 190 deg. C. Put in small potatoes (if wanted) when getting hot.

Grease a small loaf pan well.

Combine first six ingredients. Beat eggs in small bowl; add soy flour and some of the water or vegetable stock and beat again until fairly smooth. Add remaining liquid.

Pour over the previous mixture, mix and pack lightly into loaf pan.

Bake in fairly hot oven at 190 deg. C. for about 45 minutes until firm and lightly brown.

VEGETABLE-WHEAT-NUT LOAF

¾ cup chopped raw peanuts.
1 cup fine celery with leaves.
¼ cup chopped parsley (or chervil)
⅓ cup chopped onion.
1 cup canned tomato
1 egg slightly beaten.
1 cup wheat germ.
½ tsp. salt.
2 tbsp. soy oil.

Combine all ingredients in order given; bake in small greased loaf pan at moderate heat 177 deg. C. for about 35 minutes until lightly brown and firm.

This loaf is a bit softer (or looser) than the Peanut Loaf but both make fine nutritious sandwich fillings.

Brown Squares for lunch boxes carry well without falling apart, contain a relatively small amount of sugar yet are as filled with energy makers as the sandwich fillings.

BROWN SQUARES

First Part:
2 cups wholewheat flour..
½ cup soft margarine.
¼ cup demerara sugar.
Second part:
2 eggs.
2 tbsp. demerara sugar.
1 tsp. dark molasses.
1 cup wheat germ.
½ tsp. salt.
1 cup dark raisins.
½ cup chopped raw peanuts.
2 tbsp. lemon juice and pulp.

Combine first 3 ingredients. Pack into well-greased 9 by 12-inch pan. Bake in moderate oven 177 deg. C. for 15 minutes.

Beat eggs to froth, mix in remaining ingredients. Spread over cooled baked mixture. Bake for 25 minutes at same moderate temperature.

Mark in squares while still warm; cut when cool, about 30 squares — chewy, moist and good.

ONASSIS WOMEN STAND TOGTHER

SKORPIOS, Greece (UPI) — Jacqueline and Christina Onassis, both dressed in black, stood together with tears in their eyes for a moment of family solidarity beside the grave of the man they mourned.

A priest led prayers Sunday for the graveside requiem, held 40 days after the death of Greek shipping magnate Aristotle Onassis as required by Greek Orothodox tradition.

The two women, who have denied press reports of a feud over the multimillionaire's inheritance, arrived at the Onassis-owned island of Skorpios Saturday on separate flights.

Jacqueline arrived with Onassis' sister, Artemi Garoufallidi, on a regular flight to the Aktion Airport across the bay from Skorpios. Christina, Onassis' daughter and probable heir to most of the Onassis fortune, flew in on an amphibious plane.

A spokesman for Christina Saturday denied reports of an inheritance battle as well as reports that the shipping tycoon was planning to divorce the 45-year-old Jacqueline before he died March 15 in Paris of pneumonia and a muscle disease known as myasthenia gravis.

Both Christina and Jacqueline wore black suits and matching blouses and stockings as they stood at the graveside ceremony with tears in their eyes along with other members of the Onassis family and their associates.

After the prayers, mourners were given traditional boiled wheat sprinkled with white sugar known as "kolyva."

The graveside ceremony was held near the white-washed chapel of Panagitsa (little mother of God), where Aristotle and the famed widow of the late president John F. Kennedy were married in 1968. The shipping magnate, whose exact age was never a certainty, was more than 20 years Jacqueline's senior, and the marriage created an international sensation.

By MICHAEL LAMM

Dear Mike:

I recently put dual exhausts on my 1973 Torino V-8. The new pipe uses a glass-pack muffler, but the other side still has the stock muffler. Will the difference in back pressure hurt my engine?

CONCERNED

Dear Concerned:

No, but on the other hand you're missing at least part of both claimed advantages for twin exhaust systems: 1) better performance; 2) a better sound. I say "claimed" because in my opinion, both claims are overrated.

Dear Mike:

I need a starter solenoid for a 1950 DeSoto. Where can I get it?

LOST

Dear Lost:

Any six-volt solenoid will do, and most auto parts houses still stock six-volt solenoids. So if your regular parts store doesn't carry it, shop around.

Dear Mike:

I live out in an area of unpaved roads. My problem is that my 1969 Nova is too low for reasonable off-highway travel. It keeps bottoming and hitting things with its understructure. What's the best way to raise it a few inches while still preserving its ride and handling?

BONNIE

Dear Bonnie:

Try spacers in your front coil springs plus air-ride shock absorbers on the rear. Pump-up shocks are more expensive but a lot more stable than longer spring shackles.

Dear Mike:

A buddy of mine is teaching me about cars, and one of the things we want to do is tune-ups. I own a 1971 Duster with the 6-cylinder engine. We found it almost impossible to get at the points in the distrubutor, because the distributor is wedged in between the engipe and the inner fender. If we remove the distributor, how can we be sure to get it back in the right way?

TUNER

Dear Tuner:

The secret is to know the position of the rotor before you pull out the distributor. Because although the distributor drive has a slot in the bottom to locate it, the slot happens to be shallow, and often you think you've hit the slot while actually you're several teeth off. By recording the rotor's position, you'll be sure to be right on.

Orphan-Saving Plan Ignored

elizabeth forbes

In all the recent discussions and news releases about abandoned and orphaned children of Cambodia and Viet Nam, the most obvious way of helping to keep them alive while they wait for adoption, has been almost completely ignored.

That's how Constance "Tony" Butler, chairman of Victoria Committee of UNICEF Canada sees it — and she has a good argument.

"It's going to take time to screen those children and to make sure they really are abandoned or orphans," she points out. "In the meantime there are thousands of them in need of food and health care."

That's where UNICEF Canada comes in. "It's the only relief agency remaining in Cambodia and in Viet Nam at the present time."

Paul Ignatieff, UNICEF representative in Phnom Penh, who is a Canadian, is still at his post and he has already been instrumental in mounting an effective relief effort for children there.

In Viet Nam, UNICEF headquarters are in Saigon, from where the agency works with both the north and the south.

In addition, UNICEF is supplying emergency shelter material, drugs and food to mothers and children displaced by military action in the Indochina Peninsula.

This is over and above a $44 million program of assistance the agency has under way in all parts of the peninsula.

During past weeks, UNICEF stockpiles of medical supplies, children's food, and shelter material (including tarpaulins and mosquito netting) have been maintained in Singapore, Bangkok and Hong Kong.

Some of those supplies have already gone to Viet Nam, and last week, the first daily airlift of relief supplies (10 tons for UNICEF) went into Hanoi.

Both Tony Butler and Nancy Heron, immediate past chairman of the Victoria committee, tell you that while UNICEF has recently allocated a further $4 million to this relief program "It is obvious this is only a fraction of the total funds that will be required."

Here it is that Mrs. Butler comes up with a common sense suggestion.

"We read that 1,000 British Columbians raised their hands recently and offered to adopt Cambodian or Viet Nam orphans.

"They must know by now that it is going to take months to check, screen and approve, not only the children by themselves.

"In the meantime those children and thousands of others need food and care and UNICEF Canada is going to need more money to keep that food and care moving.

"Therefore, if each one of the 1,000 British Columbians who were willing to spend money on an adopted child once it was in their home, would give only $10 now to UNICEF relief funds, it would go a long way toward keeping those children alive and reasonably well."

Ten dollars, Mrs. Heron says, "would amount to almost $30 by the time it went to work out there."

These two dedicated women assure you that "it is our own people who supervise distribution of UNICEF relief supplies. No part of the work is turned over to local governments.

They also remind you that while UNICEF Canada was organized by the United Nations and works as a part of the UN it is autonomous and "its projects are chosen and planned by Canadians." It is also non-religious and non-partisan.

That about sums it up, Tony Butler says, except to remind anyone who would like to give a donation — small or large — that if the money is to be effective "quick action is needed."

You send your donation to the British Columbia UNICEF Canada Committee, P.O. Box 602, Station "A", Vancouver, B.C., or to the same committee at 739 Hastings Street, Vancouver.

FOOTNOTE — An assembly of the British Columbia Federation of Women scheduled for last weekend in Victoria, and the exciting possibility of a march of women's groups through the downtown streets as part of the program, has all been wiped out.

Reason? CUPE picket lines that have made it impossible to hold meetings in Esquimalt Recreation Centre or any other comparable hall or centre, here or in Vancouver.

Therefore, the assembly and that proposed march have been indefinitely postponed. My sympathy goes out to those women who have worked for weeks to plan and organize the gathering.

CUT-OUT WORLD is used by Mrs. Butler to point out the places where the United Nations is providing relief through UNICEF.

THOUSANDS FOUND WITH RARE BLOOD

PORT MORESBY (Reuter) — Red Cross workers in Papua-New Guinea have discovered thousands of people with a blood group so rare that it was previously known in only 16 persons in the world.

It is the Gerbich negative group, which was discovered during a Red Cross search for donors of another rare group, Cartwright negative, needed to keep a five-year-old girl alive.

Lubricating the Hubs

CYCLING

By DOUG LANGFORD

In the next three articles, I will cover hub lubrication, adjustment and replacement of brakes and derailleur cables on 10-speed bikes.

To remove the front wheel and lubricate the hub, you will need good all-purpose grease, cleaning solvent, clean rags, and a few basic tools. I used an adjustable wrench, a ⅝ inch wrench, a pair of needlenose pliers and a thin screwdriver.

NOTE: The entire sequence described here is one I used while writing this article. A Canadian-made 10-speed was used.

Wheels are most easily removed by turning the bike upside down. I used a piece of cardboard to protect the saddle from the concrete floor and blocks of wood under the handlebars to keep the bike steady.

Loosen and remove axle nuts and washers. Pull wheel from drop-outs. It might be necessary to partially deflate tire or spread the brake arms by loosening anchor nut holding the brake cable pads. If you have a bench-mounted vice, in order for the wheel to clear the brake insert one end of the axle between grip and tighten on the axle locknut. This makes it easy to loosen and remove the other locknut and adjusting cones. Do not tighten vice (or vice-grips if you use them) on axle. This will result in crushed threads and you will find it almost impossible to replace axle nuts. Pull axle out, remove other locknut and cone and clean and dry all parts.

Next, lay the wheel on its side and remove dust cap covering the ball bearings by gently prying around the edge with a screwdriver. Be careful not to damage cap.

Remove loose ball bearings and place them in solvent. Follow same steps for removing other dust caps and bearings. Clean hub and all parts thoroughly. Inspect retainer and bearings for wear. Remove the other locknut and cone from axle and role axle on a flat surface. If the axle is bent, replace it.

Thread one of the cones onto either end of the axle until outer edge of cone is about one-inch from the end of the axle, then thread one locknut, and tighten against cone. Apply multi-purpose grease to bearing cups in the hub. This will keep bearings in place during assembly. Grease bearings and place them in hub. Fit dust cap over them and press into place. Do the same to other side of hub. Then slide the axle into the hub and thread on the other cone and locknut. Tighten cone with fingers until snug and secure it with locknut. Hold it! Before you tighten the locknut, back the cone off a quarter turn. There, now you should have a pretty close adjustment. Remember there should be only the slightest amount of side play in the wheel.

And make sure hub cones and locknuts are centred on axle before you install wheel on bike. Put washers, if your bike has them, outside of the forks, with knurled or serrated side against forks, thread axle nuts on and tighten. Spin wheel. When it stops, the valve stem should stop at the lowest point.

REAR HUB:

Removal of the rear wheel is a little more difficult. Shift chain to smallest rear sprocket. After loosening axle nuts, you must pull derailleur toward rear of bike and move wheel forward and out of rear dropout. Remove chain from sprocket, release the derailleur and pull the wheel clear of the frame. Remove threaded spacer nut from sprocket side of hub and you are ready to take off the sprocket cluster.

You will need a special tool for removing rear sprocket cluster or free wheel. Here again, a bench vice is handy. Tighten tool in vice jaws and lay wheel down to it so that free wheel and tool mesh. Turn counter clock-wise, (chances are it will be very tight) until it breaks free. After you unthread cluster, pull off the spoke protector.

A word of caution here: As you remove parts, lay them on work bench in an orderly fashion, in the same sequence as removal. I found following this rule and cleaning parts one at a time, as opposed to throwing them all together in a can full of solvent, made for an orderly job and easily assembled hub.

Follow the same steps in removing locknuts and cones, prying off dust cap and removing ball bearings as you did for the front hub. Clean hub and all parts in solvent and wipe dry. Check axle for straightness and look over bearings and cones for wear. Replace bearings and dust caps using a generous amount of grease. The grease should hold bearings in place when replacing axle in hub. Rethread the cone and locknut on one end of axle until locknut is one and a half inches from end of axle. Tighten locknut against cone. Slide axle through hub from the threaded side and install cone and locknut on other side of axle. Make sure no bearings have dropped out during reassembly. When tightening last cone and locknut, bear in mind there should only be the slightest amount of side play in the wheel. If locknuts are not tightened properly, the adjustment could change when axle nuts are tightened to bike frame.

Put spoke protector in place and carefully thread sprocket cluster on clockwise. There is no need to tighten too securely as the pedalling action will snug it up nicely after the wheel is back on the bike.

Now, slide washer on each end of axle and start axle nuts. Be sure serrated side of washer faces hub. Move derailleur toward rear of bike and drop wheel in place in frame. Release derailleur. Chain should be on smallest sprocket again. Return wheel to original position in frame drop-outs. Chipped paint on the outside of the frame, caused by serrated washers, will indicate correct position.

While the bike is upside down, run through the gears to make sure everything is working correctly.

'Bad Bite' Blamed On Bad Genes

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — The human jaw is getting smaller, its chin is receding and its teeth are getting more crooked, says a University of Michigan scientist.

"Our whole facial structure below the eyes is falling to pieces," says Dr. James Harris, chairman of the department of orthodontics. "When we see a person with perfect teeth, it's so rare that we take pictures."

Harris has spent the last decade studying the teeth of ancient and present-day Nubians, a genetically distinct tribe who lived along the banks of the Nile River for thousands of years.

Harris and his colleagues studied the Nubians, who exhibit the facial features of Caucasians and the bone structure of black Africans, because sketal remains dating back to the period 200 to 1500 A.D. were available.

He began his study to determine why so many people — particularly North Americans — suffer from malocclusion, or "bad bite."

Harris said the primary reason humans regularly suffer from malocclusion is that their jaw is growing smaller but the teeth are getting smaller at a far slower rate.

Thus, teeth crowd into an undersized jawbone and the consequences are jammed, crooked teeth..

Normally, genetic changes harmful to a species — like too — small jaws — are not reproduced because the species usually does not survive to breed.

But with civilization and softer foods, children with malocclusions have survived and passed on defective genes to their children.

WELFARE EXPOSE MAY BOOMERANG

DETROIT (UPI) — State welfare officials plan to seek federal prosecution of a state lawmaker who applied for welfare under false pretenses.

Wayne County prosecutor William Cahalan refused to comply with a state department of social services request that charges be filed against state Rep. Kirby Holmes.

The two-term, 42-year-old Utica lawmaker jubilantly told newsmen after the decision he knew he was not guilty of wrongdoing.

"All I wanted to do was show that there is a lot of fraud and error in the welfare system," Holmes said. "And I think I proved it."

Holmes used a Detroit address to obtain about $450 in cheques and food orders from a Detroit welfare office, pretending he was an abandoned, unemployed father.

Cahalan said he would not press charges because there was no evidence Holmes intended to defraud the welfare department. He said the fact Holmes did not cash the cheques or stamps indicated he did not intend to commit fraud.

9 IN MEMORIAM

RUSSELL — In loving memory of Albert, our Dad and Grandpa, who passed away April 21st, 1974.
There was a gate at the end of the Road
Through which he had to pass alone
And there in a light we could not see
Our Father claimed His own
Beyond the Gate our Loved One
Finds Happiness and Rest
And there is comfort in the Thought
That a Loving God knew best.
Always in our thoughts.
—Bruce and Maureen, Diana, Debbie and Mike.

BUCKETT — In loving memory of Ray.
Never the spirit was born; the spirit shall cease to be never;
Never was time it was not; End and Beginning are dreams!
Birthless and deathless and changeless remaineth the spirit forever;
Death hath not touched it at all, dead though the house of it seems!
—Mom and Dad

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
—WITH GRATITUDE. SANDS.

Herbs Hold a Threefold Benefit

Herbs as ornamental and useful plants on modern balconies, sundecks and patios have a future as great as their past. For several centuries these fragrant plants were grown in the enclosed courtyards of every castle and monastery. They were indispensable to the life of the times as food and medicine.

Today and tomorrow, herbs may well be regarded as necessary on three counts — their clean fresh aromas in an increasingly unclean air; the flavor either delicate or robust they impart to processed precooked foods; and the visual charm of their foliage and flowers as they grow.

A dozen or more herbs are easily grown in as many tubs or planters on a small or large balcony or sundeck. In a patio, herb plants show a new charm when planted in open soil squares alternating with paving squares as a border in full sun.

In all three situations — balcony, deck or patio — choose a half dozen of the perennial sorts so that annual replacement is not required.

The remainder will be annual herbs grown from seeds sown where they are to remain for the one season.

For unusual fragrance have rosemary. The grey green needle foliage and smother of pale lavender bloom in May is a pleasant delight. Leaves of this shrub are evergreen so are available all winter to use as wanted.

Another small shrubby herb is the dark blue Munstead lavender. This has grey needle foliage and flowers in late July. Use with foods is limited to a pinch in fragrant and aromatic teas.

The common thyme is a 12-inch bushy shrub, dark green all year and smothered with tiny mauve flowers in June.

Small sprigs at any season of the year are taken for improving canned foods. A strong pungent herb to use sparingly. Sage is perhaps the most commonly overused herb. The volatile oils are freely released in cooking, permeating the whole dish far more completely than garlic ever does. Although sage may be the best known herb to you, do use it sparingly.

Winter savory is a good little shrubby herb to have on a balcony or elsewhere in a tub, for it too provides small twiggy branches from which to strip the leaves for rejuvenating canned or packaged soups.

These five permanent herbs may be planted now in spring if you hunt around for the one or two sources of supply.

You can grow your own by sowing a half dozen seeds of each kind and selecting the three or four best seedlings of each.

Other permanent herbs, though not shrubs, are chives, lemon balm, mint, fennel; and tarragon which is the most difficult of all both to get and to keep going in mild wet winters.

The first three are, I find, the indispensable easy ones. Chives are grown in little clumps which soon spread into big groups, they start new leaf growth in late March just in time to take over the onion flavoring as winter onions (and garlic) begin to decline.

Mint follows a few weeks later together with lemon balm. These two are closely related and are frequently used together.

Lemon balm substitutes for fresh lemon in many instances, being especially useful in reducing acidity when cooking fruits such as rhubarb, green gooseberries, strawberries and other berries, thus cutting sugar by about two-thirds in these desserts.

Plants of these can usually be bought in spring too for planting now.

Annual herbs to sow outdoors now where they are to grow are: dill, borage, chervil, summer savory, sweet marjoram, and parsley. Sweet basil must wait until warm soil and warm air before being sown. It is one of the best herbs for green salads.

Don't delay further in preparing a place for your choice of these edible and ornamental herbs.

RECRUITS SOUGHT FOR COAST GUARD

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The greatest problem facing the Canadian Coast Guard is finding personnel, coast guard director Capt. W. J. M. Stuart said Sunday.

Capt. Stuart told delegates to the spring convention of the Ontario Underwater Council that the coast guard now involves 5,400 men and women, 125 vessels, 31 aircraft and two hovercraft — "but requires expansion."

He said he wasn't satisfied with the calibre of the coast guard "yet" but was pleased with the enthusiasm of officer cadets graduating from the coast guard's college in Sydney, N.S.

Arabs Hold Mini-Summit

The Manchester Guardian

BEIRUT — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat flew to the Saudi Arabian capital of Riyadh today for a mini-summit with King Khalid, President Hafez Al-Assad of Syria, and probably the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasser Arafat.

The meeting could have far-reaching effects on the Arab world's movement towards a Middle East peace settlement, and in particular on the reconvening of the Geneva conference. The main task will be to heal the differences between Egypt and Syria caused by Sadat's enthusiastic acceptance of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's abortive step-by-step diplomacy. A second requirement will be a definition by Arafat of the PLO's attitude towards Palestinian representation at Geneva.

Sadat is in no hurry to reconvene the Geneva talks — the prospect of stalemate is only too evident. Saturday Sadat dispatched his foreign minister, Ismail Fahmi, to Moscow to outline the Egyptian position. Sadat would like the participation in the Geneva talks of Britain, France and a number of non-aligned nations to avoid an otherwise inevitable Soviet-American polarization. The Egyptians have also hinted that they would not be adverse to a further initiative by Kissinger, either here in the Middle East or through negotiations in Washington. With Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko stressing the need for "thorough preparations" before the Geneva talks resume, it would seem that Sadat's attitude is at least partly accepted by the Kremlin.

Sadat's astute individualism was rather by-passed Assad. Syria gained virtually nothing form Sadat's reliance on Kissinger, but now Sadat has frozen the Middle East situation by extending the United Nations mandate in the Sinai Desert for a further three months and by pledging to re-open the Suez Canal on June 5, thus putting great pressure on Assad to renew the Golan Heights mandate when it expires at the end of May.

SADAT
. . . situation frozen

A basic tenet of Syrian policy is th need for a comprehensive Middle East settlement only through the forum of the Geneva conference, but this raises the question of Palestinian representation. Sadat's suggestion that the Arab League should speak for the PLO, and Assad's offer to include the PLO in a Syrian delegation have both been rejected by Arafat, who at the moment prefers to avoid inter-Palestinian rifts by regarding the Geneva talks as a still hypothetical event requiring no immediate decision on his part.

Sadat would like Jordan to attend the Geneva conference, despite King Hussein's public abdication of his part in a settlement in favor of the PLO, and significantly Hussein this weekend has paid a visit to King Khalid. Today's meeting in Riyadh will show whether the new Saudi leadership can maintain the pivotal role played by the late King Faisal. But essentially it will etermine how successfully Sadat can continue to pull the tangled strings of the Arab world.

GAS TO STAY ON SEABED

VANCOUVER (CP) — There's a good chance four railway cars loaded with deadly chlorine gas will be left at the bottom of Malaspina Strait, 60 miles northwest of Vancouver, says H. O. Buchanan, director of the ministry of transport's western marine division.

Amin Purges Politicians

NAIROBI (AP) — A Kenyan newspaper said Saturday that president Idi Amin of Uganda has begun a purge of leading politicians, officials and businessmen.

The paper, the Standard, said those recently arrested include George Magezi, a former commerce minister and chairman of the Uganda textiles board.

Quoting Ugandan refugee sources, the newspaper said the purge was apparently connected with corruption in the state-run Ugandan development corporation whose chairman, Semei Nyanzi, also was arrested.

Amin said last month he was concerned with widespread corruption in Uganda and that persons found guilty of embezzlement and traders found hoarding or overcharging would be executed by firing squad.

Body Identified

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police have identified the body of a man found Sunday in the Fraser River.

A spokesman said a man out walking with his son found the body of Edward Emmanuel Singer, 46, of Port Coquitlam. The body was wrapped in a carpet and bound with clothesline.

Police are investigating the possibility of a drug overdose.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Back in 1955, in the Masters Team-of-Four Championship, a deal arose which has become a classic one in the field of steering a declarer away from the winning way of playing a hand. Here is the deal.

Neither side vulnerable. North deals.

♠ 6 4
♥ 8
♦ A K Q J 10 8 5

WEST
♠ K Q 10 9 7 3
♥ A Q 7 6

♣ 10 5

EAST
♠ J 8 2
♥ J 9 5 3
♦ 7 6 4 2
♣ K 3

SOUTH
♠ A 5
♥ K 10 4 2
♦ 3
♣ A J 9 7 6 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♦	Pass	2 ♣	2 ♠
3 ♦	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
4 ♣	Pass	6 ♣	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

West's spade opening was captured by declarer's ace. Declarer next surveyed the possibilities. First, East had to have the king of trumps, for otherwise the contract was doomed to defeat. So declarer promptly led his singleton diamond to dummy's ace, after which he laid down the queen of trumps.

The defenders now cooperated beautifully. East played the three, and West dropped the ten-spot. This play by West "convinced" declarer that West had no more trumps; and, hence, that East had been dealt the K-5-3 of trumps.

Hoping to "coup" East's remaining K-5 of trumps, declarer then prepared to cash as many diamonds as he could. When East eventually trumped low, declarer would overtrump. His ace of trumps would next fell East's now-singleton king, after which declarer would re-enter dummy via the eight of trumps. He would then continue leading diamonds, discarding theron his remaining spade and four hearts.

But when declarer led dummy's king of diamonds at trick four, West spiked declarer's hopes by ruffing the king (on this trick South had discarded his losing spade). West then cashed the ace of hearts, for the setting trick.

Had East covered the queen of clubs with his king, declarer would have been forced to fulfill his contract. He would have taken the king with the ace, and cashed the club jack, felling the two outstanding trumps. The board would next have been entered via the club eight, and on dummy's diamonds South would have discarded his five major-suit losers.

Or, if West had not false-carded with the club ten, declarer, in all probability, would have led a second club off dummy, felling East's king and West's ten. And, once again, with the club eight serving as an entry to the board, South would bring home his contract.

NDP Candidates Seek Party Structure Change

BROWN

BROADBENT
. . . public direction

SASKATOON (CP) — The structure of the federal New Democratic Party must change, the four candidates for the party's leadership said Sunday.

They all called, as they had a night earlier at another meeting of party members in Regina, for a change in policy emphasis from social to economic concerns — primarily the need to extend public ownership of the Canadian economy.

At the same time, they urged the building of a stronger federal party structure to work for the election of a national NDP government.

The four — B.C. MLA Rosemary Brown, former Toronto MP John Harney, Yorkton-Melville MP Lorne Nystrom and NDP parliamentary leader Ed Broadbent — were here as a part of a federal tour before the July leadership convention in Winnipeg.

The need to emphasize economic, rather than social policies, was stressed by all the speakers at the afternoon meeting attended by about 200 persons.

Only their way of expressing it separated the candidates.

Brown, 45, said it was time to quit "tinkering with the system".

"The commitment to our own economy, the commitment to control it, is a commitment we can not modify in any way," she said.

Broadbent, 39, made his point by calling for more public direction of investment decisions in the country. He said energy investment, such as the Alberta oil sands Syncrude project, is a good example of investment decisions being taken without sufficient public direction.

"We are allocating billions of dollars on development without any thought by government at the national level about what our priorities should be," he said.

Harney, 44, said the party should offer a plan for an "alternate society" and 29-year-old Nystrom called for more government intervention in the economy and more federal policies which will aid the west, including a better transportation system and strengthened and expanded marketing boards for western produce.

While all spoke in favor of a stronger federal NDP presence, including a regular party publication and more fulltime federal workers, Harney, defeated in the 1974 election and an unsuccessful candidate for the party leadership when T. C. Douglas stepped down, was the most blunt.

Unless the party works as hard as possible to obtain power federally, its dreams of realizing a new society will never be achieved, he said. With the electoral defeats of 1974 the current fortunes of the party are not good.

After their speeches the candidates fielded questions and again agreed on most topics.

They said abortion should be removed from the criminal code and become a matter for a woman and her doctor to decide while at the same time more birth control information should be made available.

UBC STAFF SIGNS

VANCOUVER (CP) — About 1,300 maintenance, food services and custodial employees at the University of British Columbia voted by 86 per cent Sunday to accept a new one-year contract.

The workers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, ratified an agreement giving them a 20-per-cent wage increase. Base rate for the union was $524 a month.

Arnie Myers, university spokesman, said the board of governors would probably hold a special meeting Tuesday to ratify the agreement.

The union had threatened strike action that could have disrupted final university examinations.

Cannabis Claimed Therapeutic Drug For Glaucoma

OTTAWA (CP) — Cannabis, or marijuana, may be about to stage a comeback as a therapeutic drug after 40 years in the medicinal wilderness, says an Ottawa doctor.

"I think it won't be too long before we have cannabinol acetate drops for the treatment of glaucoma," Dr. Ian Henderson said in a recent interview.

Dr. Henderson, associate professor of surgery and pharmacology at the University of Ottawa, estimates it will be a year or two before the drug comes into use in treating the eye disorder, which can cause blindness.

Cannabis once was part of the pharmacological arsenal that doctors turned to in fighting disease. But it fell out of use as more effective modern drugs became available for relief of pain, depression and suppression of convulsions.

Marijuana still cannot rival its modern successors in these fields, but research — spurred in the last decade by the steadily increasing "recreational" use of the drug—has come up with a number of promising loads.

One new medicinal use for cannabis, or the various forms of its active ingredient, tetrahydrocannabinol (TMC), may be to treat the eye disease.

Glaucoma is a condition in which fluids that nourish the eye build up pressure because of constriction of the vessels that draw them off. When pressure builds up within the eyeball, the patient may develop pain, headaches and "haloing" of the vision.

Current treatment involves eyedrops that are painful and may lose their effectiveness in time, Dr. Henderson said. The only recourse then is surgery to create a channel to drain the fluids.

Cannabis may be an alternative that could make surgery unnecessary. Taken in any form — eyedrops, orally or smokes — cannabis gives a 25-to-30-per-cent drop in pressure within the eyeball.

"This is often quite sufficient to relieve the symptoms," Dr. Henderson said. Furthermore, the result is obtained with low doses.

Dr. Henderson told of one United States ophthalmologist who used marijuana with considerable success in treating his glaucoma patients. He told them to bake the weed in chocolate cakes, then eat the cake. But he stopped after his local medical society leaned on him for recommending an illegal drug.

Dr. Henderson, a consultant to the federal health department who has been observing the hearings of a Senate committee considering new cannabis legislation, agreed to discuss the possible medical uses of the drug with a reporter.

Research shows some hopeful prospects for the use of one or more cannabis derivatives in treatment of advanced cancer, high blood pressure, asthma and suppression of rejection in organ transplants, he said.

Unlike the glaucoma treatment, however, none of these is near to practical use.

AIM Branch In Penticton

PENTICTON (CP)—A new chapter of the American Indian Movement was started here after a special aim assembly in the Okanagan city this weekend.

Chief Ken Basil, AIM's British Columbia regional director, said the purpose of the assembly was to draw AIM members from across the province together.

It is the second AIM chapter in B.C. The first is in Vancouver and Chief Basil said a third may be started within the next two weeks in Westbank, about 20 miles north of here.

Chief Adam Eneas of the Penticton band said the principles of AIM will give new direction to the band's young people because AIM has much to contribute on his reserve.

Sweet Start for Charles' Tour

Charles inspects Ottawahonor guard on arrival

OTTAWA — A trip to a maple sugar bush and a special performance by the National Arts Centre Orchestra highlight the first full day of Prince Charles's visit to Canada today.

The Prince of Wales, who arrived Sunday, is on an 11-day tour which will take him 8,000 miles through the Northwest Territories before his departure from Winnipeg, April 30 to HMS Hermes, docked at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where he is a communications officer.

The 26-year-old prince, heir to the British throne, is making his first solo visit to Canada. On earlier trips, he accompanied the Queen and Prince Philip.

Today, Charles is to visit a sugar bush near Chelsea, Que., just north of the capital, to watch sap boiled down into the maple syrup and maple sugar.

In addition, he will tour the national aeronautical collection, an exhibit of Canadian aircraft in hangars at Rockcliffe air base, visit the city halls of Ottawa and neighboring Hull, Que., and hear a special concert at the arts centre.

The prince looked tanned and fit after a trip to the Bahamas, where he had been visiting his great-uncle, Lord Louis Mountbatten.

Following arrival ceremonies, including the usual military honors, he drove to Government House for a press reception and private dinner with Gov.-Gen. and Mme. Jules Leger.

Several hundred persons were on hand for his arrival and other spectators lined the route of his motorcade from the airport to Government House.

The prince leaves Wednesday for the North, after a carefully-orchestrated Ottawa schedule that will see him visit a local recreation centre, meet justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, tour the Parliament Buildings, lunch with Prime Minister Trudeau and take part in several receptions and official functions.

At 50, Curtis Wants To Be Renaissance Man

LOS ANGELES — With the approach of his 50th birthday, Tony Curtis announces his ambition: to become a Renaissance Man.

Not a small aim for the former Bernard Schwartz, whose education was gained at the Bronx' Seward Park high school, in the U.S. Navy and the commissary at Universal Studio.

"I have been painting for some time, and I also create boxes and assemblages. I'm now into lithography and etching, and I work at UCLA with an art professor who allows me to use the university's equipment," he told an interviewer.

"I'm now writing a book . . . about a guy who goes into the navy, then comes to Hollywood as a stunt man. My agent is Irving Lazar."

Among Lazar's other clients: Truman Capote and Richard Nixon.

After a series of mishaps, he figures his career has turned upward. He is proud of his work in the gangster movie Lepke, soon to be released by Warner Brothers.

Last month he appeared on NBC in a two-hour movie, McCoy, which is deemed likely for a mini-series in the fall.

Curtis' career was brilliantly managed with the result that Curtis was granted percentages of such films as The Defiant Ones, Some Like It Hot, The Vikings and Taras Bulba.

"And I always got a percentage of the gross," the actor added.

"None of that business of waiting for the films to show a profit. There's too much funny bookkeeping going on."

U.K. Hoboes Really Are Kings Of the Road

LONDON — Britain's hoboes are having the times of their lives — living in first-class accommodation, receiving offers of new jobs and new clothes — and all at the taxpayer's expense, says a doctor writing in the British Medical Journal.

Dr. Nigel Cooke says the hoboes flit from hospital to hospital getting "first-class hotel accommodation" and medical care which possibly costs Britain's state-run health service millions of dollars.

They accept offers of clean new clothes, but are less keen on suggestions of jobs or shelter in hostels, he says.

Because the hoboes produce genuine symptoms of illness and arrive dirty and infested with fleas, Dr. Cooke says there is nothing doctors can do but admit them to hospital.

He says one hobo about 70 years old spent 1,000 days in Edinburgh hospitals between 1967 and 1973, almost one day in two, costing the hospitals more than $25,000.

NEW YORK — Ellen Burstyn followed up her recent Oscar victory by winning a Broadway Tony on Sunday night as best actress for her role in Same Time, Next Year. The musical The Wiz, an all-black version of the Wizard of Oz took seven awards.

LONDON — The Earl of Mar, 60, Premier Earl of Scotland and scion of a family so old its origins are listed in Debrett's Guide to the Peerage as "lost in antiquity," fell to his death today fro mhis London apartment. The 30th in a line extending back to 1404 he was still alive when found on the street below his fifth floor apartment, but died on his way to the hospital.

CHICAGO — Mayor Richard Daley, who will be 73 years old in 25 days, Sunday began his 21st year in office — the longest consecutive term of any Chicago mayor. LONDON — Sport has become a home-wrecking obsession in Britain and has replaced sex in some marriages, a leading psychiatrist says.

Dr. J. A. Harrington, medical director of a Birmingham clinic, told a symposium organized by the Institute of Sports Medicine that far from being paragons of fitness, many sportsmen are in "a psychological mess" and often in need of psychiatric help.

"Man's obsession with sport can be a real threat to marriage and not a few homes have been broken on the playing field," Dr. Harrington said.

BEVERLY HILLS — Nancy Walker, best known for role as Valerie Harper's mother in the Rhoda, was honored Sunday by the Southern California Chapter of American Women in Radio and Television for "outstanding contributions to her profession."

PROSSER, Wash. — Robert Roose's cooking is so good that the judge decided to keep him at the county jail instead of sending him to the state penitentiary.

Prisoners and jailers alike raved about the beef stroganoff, apple pie and other goodies Roose concocted for them while he was awaiting sentencing.

They were on the verge of losing him last week when Superior Court Judge Albert Yencopal sentenced Roose to serve 15 years in the state penitentiary at Walla Wall for grand larceny by cheque.

Sheriff Robert Rupp and jailer Lyle Peterson appealed to the judge to let Roose stay in the Benton County jail and this week, Yencopal said he would grant the highly unusual request. He changed the sentence to a year in the county jail.

STUDENTS WILL BE D----D

STANFORD, Calif. — The faculty senate at Stanford University has restored "D" grades for undergraduates, partly to give the "C" grade more status.

"Bringing back the 'D' was recommended unanimously by a faculty-student committee as a means of combating grade inflation and making the 'C' more respectable," said a weekend statement.

U.K. POLICE SEEK POWERFUL DRUG

LONDON (Reuter) — British police are investigating the appearance on the illegal drug market of a powerful new form of the hallucinogenic drug LSD, police sources said Sunday.

The sources confirmed a newspaper report describing the appearance of the drug, which concentrates LSD into tablets about the size of a microdot.

The newspaper said the drug is circulated in tablets no larger than the tip of a ballpoint pen. Each tablet was eight times more powerful than ordinary LSD tablets.

Officially, police would say only that "there is some substance in the story but we are not prepared to go into details."

Portugal Violent As Voting Nears

LISBON (AP)—Pre-election violence erupted in northern Portugal today, and more than 20 persons were reported injured in several incidents.

Armed leftists besieged members of the moderate Centre Social Democrat (CSD) party holding a campaign rally in a threatre in Guimares.

Diplomatic sources said the leftists stoned the theatre, and military units were deployed to protect the CDS members. But the seige continued.

One soldier and two other persons were reported wounded by gunfire at Guimares. A Lisbon newspaper says units of the 2nd Light Artillery Regiment in Oporto were sent to Guimaraes as reinforcements.

A clash between leftists and CDS members also was reported in the streets of Oporto city.

Communist youths were said to have stoned a motorcade of CSD members, but military police prevented them from attacking the party headquarters.

An estimated 100,000 Portuguese socialist party supporters marched through the streets of downtown Lisbon Sunday, presenting a major challenge to the Communist party for the April 25 elections.

Political sources said the Socialist rally and march drew out more people than any political event in Portugal since the May Day parade organized a year ago by all political parties supporting the overthrow of the rightist dictatorship.

Portugal's national news agency, ANI, said more than 100,000 Socialist supporters crowded into a local soccer stadium to watch folk dances, listen to bands, and hear party leader Mario Soares speak.

Then they marched through the centre of the city in a line that stretched for two miles.

"We will win! We will win!" the crowds chanted as they marched.

Ontario Flood Threat Over

Canadian Press

Flooding problems ended Sunday night in most parts of Ontario suffering from the effects of storms since Friday.

Most water levels in the Grand River watershed area — including Kitchener, Guelph, Cambridge and Brantford — remained above normal Sunday night but were dropping, and no further problems with flooding are expected, an official of the Grand River Conservation Authority said.

Most flooding during the weekend was in low-lying, unpopulated areas and followed warm temperatures and 1¾ inches of rain Friday night, he said.

Water levels in the area were expected to be normal by mid-week.

A state of emergency declared Saturday night by Paris Mayor Jack Bawcutt because of possible flooding was lifted Sunday night after the crest of the Nith River passed without overflowing the banks.

Volunteers worked through Saturday night and Sunday to sandbag banks in Paris, northwest of Brantford, where the Nith River joins the Grand River.

Paris police said there was little damage except for a few flooded basements.

In New Hamburg, about 15 miles west of Kitchener, the racetrack fairgrounds were under water and some basements were flooded after water levels on the Nith River rose to a record 12 feet Saturday, up from 10.2 feet in 1974.

Cambridge merchants who feared a repeat of the 1974 flood boarded up stores and moved stock Saturday, but there was little damage as the crest of the Grand River passed through Cambridge Saturday night. The water level rose to 13.4 feet, 4½ feet below the flood level last year.

Farther north and west of the Grand River area, the Maitland and Saugeen rivers also flooded during the weekend, causing some evacuations.

Up to two feet of water covered downtown Listowel, 30 miles north of Stratford, early Saturday after the Maitland River flooded Friday night.

Listowel Mayor David Hay said Sunday owners of more than 30 stores had removed goods before the flood.

Flooding of the Thames River Saturday after a 1½-inch rainfall Friday night left three feet of water in a downtown section of St. Marys, about 10 miles southwest of Stratford.

In Stratford, the Avon River flooded, covering a street beside the Stratford Festival Theatre with a foot of water.

A 16-car CNR freight train was derailed Friday night in Hawestone, about five miles south of Orillia, because water covered 15 feet of track after a heavy rainstorm.

The players in the Stanley Cup are paid for only the first four games of each series, so Philadelphia Flyers saw no point in prolonging the agony in their best-of-seven quarter-final against Toronto Maple Leafs. Times News Services

President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam today announced his resignation as North Vietnamese forces pressed closer toward Saigon.

He said former U.S. president Richard Nixon gave him written promises of aid but U.S. Secretary-of-State Henry Kissinger betrayed South Vietnam. "I never thought a man like Kissinger would deliver our people to such a fate," he charged.

Thieu's resignation opened the way for possible negotiations of a ceasefire with the Communists, but in Paris the Viet Cong raised new demands — immediate withdrawal of all Americans from Vietnam and elimination from power of all members of Thieu's "clique."

Whether the communists would even try to negotiate a cease-fire now was a matter of doubt.

They have massed 100,000 troops for a final assault on Saigon and have moved the front lines to within 26 miles of the presidential palace.

Hours before Thieu's resignation, military analysts in Saigon said the government's situation on the battlefield appeared hopeless.

Radio contact, meanwhile, was lost with South Vietnamese forces under heavy attack at Xuan Loc, the gateway to the capital 40 miles east of Saigon, and still another province on the coast 35 miles farther east apparently was about to fall.

In his speech Thieu predicted: "There will be more challenges and fierce fighting in the near future."

He then announced his resignation, and added:

"I told President Nixon and the U.S. Congress that I did not demand an indefinite assistance but only assistance for five years so we can develop our economy.

At Clark Air Base in the Philippines, the pace of evacuation from beseiged Saigon continued to quicken Sunday night with arrival of planeload after planeload of Americans and Vietnamese on the first leg of trips to the United States for the first time.

Some of the Vietnamese passengers were bearing large white "laissez passer" documents issued by the Saigon government, which serve both as exit visas and temporary entry permits to the United States.

The appearance of these diplomatic papers was taken as a sign that Saigon has begun to ease its strictness on departure of Vietnamese nationals.

Most of the Vietnamese arriving Sunday night appeared to be wives and children of departing Americans, many of them civilian contractors who worked for the American military in Saigon.

About 500 Vietnamese without travel papers are being held here as stateless persons pending decisions of the U.S. government.

The resignation of the 52-year-old Thieu and his denunciation of the United States raised fears of anti-American outbursts in the South Vietnamese capital.

"If the United States had intervened as it should, "Thieu declared, "we would not be losing province capitals, district capitals, and we would not be faced with losing the national capital."

In Bangkok, Thai officials said today that Thieu's nation bodes ill for Thailand.

"It looks as though South Vietnam is going the way of Cambodia — I give it 10 days to a month," a Thai foreign ministry spokesman said.

EAST POSTIES OFF THE JOB

Times News Services

Letter carriers walked off the job at 6 a.m. local time for an indefinite period in Ottawa, Kitchener-Waterloo, Ont., and Saskatoon.

Picket lines were set up at post offices but inside workers were allowed to cross them.

The union has been in a legal position to go on strike since April 14 and the men "were just exercising their right to strike," said Ottawa union representative Alex Edey.

Negotiations between the union and the post office are scheduled today, he said.

Main issue in talks between the post office and union negotiators in a conciliation report which proposes wage increases totalling $68 a week over two years. Three-year letter carriers now earn an average $177.60 a week.

Increases in the conciliation report are 38 per cent; the government has offered 25 per cent over two years.

The Letter Carriers Union and the Canadian Union of Postal workers last week agreed that if one union goes on strike, it will lift picket lines temporarily to allow members of the other union to go to and from work.

Immediate Gas Export Talks Set

WASHINGTON (CP) — Canadian and United States officials are scheduled to meet Tuesday in Ottawa to discuss proposed price increases on Canadian natural gas exported to the U.S.

Julius Katz, deputy assistant state secretary in the division of economics and business affairs, will lead the U.S. group, Katz's office said today.

"The subject is natural gas, that's all I can tell you," the spokesman said.

One informed source, who asked not to be identified, said: "The U.S. has requested the talks and Canada has agreed."

It would not immediately known who would speak for Canada.

John Nassikas, head of the Federal Power Commission (FPC), was tentatively scheduled to go but—because of a prior commitment to testify on Capitol Hill on Tuesday—will send Frank Allen, his top staff man on natural gas matters.

The word that the U.S. had asked for the meeting came less than 24 hours after two veteran senators had sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau asking for a delay in price increases.

POUND REPEATS PLUMMET

LONDON (CP) — The pound dropped sharply Monday to match its record low against major currencies amid reports British authorities will allow further depreciation of sterling rather than rely on borrowing abroad.

The Bank of England's calculation of the trade-weighted depreciation of the pound against 10 currencies widened to match the record depreciation set April 14 and Jan. 28.

The pound fell more than one cent to $2.3622 U.S. from $2.3754 Friday.

The London Sunday Times said the U.K. Treasury was prepared to let sterling drop rather than continue borrowing aboard to support it.

Meanwhile, gold declined sharply amid rumors that some South Vietnamese gold was reaching the market. The price fell to $165.60 U.S. an ounce at the London afternoon fixing from $168 in the morning and $170.25 Friday afternoon. Later, a London dealer was quoting $165 an ounce bid $165.75 offered.

Levy for School Tax Taking a Bigger Bite

Taxpayers in B.C. will pay an average of 41.21 mills to cover school costs this year, an increase of 7.15 mills over 1974.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly announced the increases today and promised school districts an additional $25.5 million in special grants to help cover mounting educational costs.

The basic school tax levy applied to all districts in B.C. has been set at 26.5 mills, an increase of 1.8 mills over last year, said Dailly, but almost all school districts have drawn up budgets far in excess of the basic budget allowance set by the provincial government and thus actual tax rates will be much higher.

Under the government's complicated financing formula, the government sets out a basic mill rate all school boards can levy (26.5 mills this year) and the basic amount it can spend for each student in the district.

The difference between the revenue raised by the basic tax rate and the basic education cost is then provided by the government in the form of a grant.

But, since all districts have costs over and above the basic budget and those costs are paid by local taxpayers, the average mill rate is much higher.

Last year the average school mill rate was 34.06 almost 10 mills higher than the basic rate and this year the average rate is 15 mills over the basic levy.

Dailly also announced $25.5 million in supplementary special aid grants to school districts to help them maintain existing programs and staffing levels this year.

The special money follows a commitment by the minister last January that no district will incur mill rate increases dramatically higher than the over-all average.

Last year the government provided an additional $21 million in special grants to school boards in order to help them reduce pupil-teacher ratios and to lessen the impact of inflating education costs on local taxpayers.

Earlier this year, Dailly would not say whether the government planned to repeat those special grants and school boards warned they would have to cut back on programs unless additional funds were forthcoming.

In some districts, where enrolments are increasing at an especially rapid rate, school boards reported they could not possibly continue the reduced student-teacher ratios without huge increases in local taxes.

Dailly said $3.8 million of the additional grants will go to those districts which had an increase in enrolments and special classes last fall.

FARMERS TO PUSH FOR BARGAINING

Four busloads of South Peace area farmers rolled into Victoria today to pressure the government to make good its promises and grant collective bargaining rights to farm-workers.

National Farmers Union president Roy Atkinson said the 100 delegates who work with grain, livestock and grass seed want the government to move towards legal certification now.

He said the delegation has no particular strategy and it is here to meet MLAs and caucus to present arguments, although some delegates were making placards in the Empress Hotel crystal ballroom.

CUPE, Region Renew Mediation

Mediation talks were renewed today for the third time in Greater Victoria civic employees dispute which entered its 14th week this morning.

The meeting at Royal Oak Inn was called by provincial mediation officer Clark gilmour, who was asked to arrange it by regional employers who, it is reported, are looking for a change in approach by the Canadian Union of Public Employees which represente municipal staffs.

On behalf of the union, CUPE Local 50 president Jim Walker was non-commital prior to the meeting.

Just before the sides moved mto separate meeting rooms, Walker said, "we're here to hear what they've got to say."

He did not indicate that the unions had any proposal to put forward and pointed out that all CUPE locals in the past two weeks had given their neogitators votes of confidence.

Gilmour made no prediction on how long today's meetings would last.

90 SEE DRIVER BEATEN

TORONTO (CP) — A 24-year-old Toronto bus driver was badly beaten by four youths on the weekend while about 90 passengers sat and watched.

"They just looked at me as if they were watching TV," said driver Jack Sardinha. "Not a single person would make a move."

He was treated for a cut eye and other head injuries.

A pregnant woman trying to board the bus was pushed to the ground and injured and a construction worker, who saw the incident and chased the youths, was struck in the forehead with a brick.

Sardinha said the incident began when a youth threw a quarter in the fare box and the other three just "marched right by." The regular fare is 40 cents.

He said he tried to stop one of the men, who claimed he had paid the fare, and the fight began.

"I tried to get up and as soon as I moved one of his buddies just let me have it. Then it was a chain reaction and they all piled on like a pack of wolves . . . They were really going at me.

Garnet Gardield Reid 16, Lenny Andrew Wilson, 18, Hansel Alonzo, 18, and Everton George Brown, 18, all of Toronto, have been charged with assault causing bodily harm and will appear in court today.

WCB Pays . . . 44 Years Late

A 61-year-old Nanaimo man has won a 44-year battle with the Workers Compensation Board and will finally receive compensation for a crippling accident that happened when he was 17.

Frank Oblack will be paid a pension retroactive to 1931 and will receive five per cent interest on the money he should have been receiving since then, the disability award officer of the WCB has ruled.

Oblack will probably receive a lump sum payment in about two months, after the WCB has computed the amount of his pension.

Oblack won his case with the help of a Victoria organization, the Disability Rights Association, set up about three years ago to help workers in their claims against the WCB.

In 1931, when Oblack was an inexperienced boy of 17 working at the South Wellington mine near Nanaimo, he was crushed between a mine car and a post which was standing too close to the car track.

He was taken off to hospital in serious condition with a crushed pelvis and has suffered a deformity of both the hips and pelvis since then. He has been unable to perform many types of work because of the injury.

At the time of the accident, his claim was turned down by the Workman's Compensation Board which ruled that Oblack was not performing part of his regular duties when he was crushed by the mine car.

The case became famous in the Nanaimo area and was appealed to the Board of Commissioners of the WCB, but again turned down. In 1941, the case was contested at the Sloan Inquiry held in Nanaimo and again turned down. But this time there was

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Canada's senior Mountie in the use of the polygraph says this crime-fighting device was slow in coming but now it's here to stay — and you can run that statement through the lie detector if you want to.

Vancouver-based Sgt. Larry Proke is confident that the future for lie detectors — they have been in fairly common use in the United States for more than 50 years — is secure.

The reason is simple, it's a first-class aid to police investigation, says Proke who supervises the Mounties polygraph program in Canada.

In general, he said in an interview here, Canadian peace officers have been cautious and even skeptical of the lie detector's potential. But that attitude is changing. Now they are trying to catch up on something which for years they're gone without.

Since Proke joined the 10-year-old RCMP polygraph unit in 1971 the workload has mushroomed. When he started there were just three officers doing the work across the country. Today there are nine — three in B.C., one each in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

Although the RCMP provide the service free, some municipal forces have formed units if their own. Vancouver City police has had one since 1966 and now has three examiners. The Calgary force has an examiner on staff, Edmonton has two, Regina one, and St. John N.B. has a man in training.

Outside of the Canadian Armed Forces which has five examiners, the CPR police which has one, and about half a dozen private polygraphists in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, no one else is engaged in the field in this country.

It's a far cry from the machine's widespread use in the United States, where there are at least 5,000 examiners.

For the private polygraphist it is a lucrative business. In the U.S. where lie detectors are used extensively in pre-employment screening and employee checks, an examiner can earn anywhere from $100 to $400 for an average two-hour test.

Proke disdains the use of the lie detector in situations other than police investigation. That's its first and best use, he says.

A test can save hundreds if hours of ponderous plodding by investigators, he says, and the results are uncannily reliable, exceeding a 90 per cent accuracy rate.

Although the $2,200 machine, which is about the size of a small suitcase and weighs about 15 pounds, is popularly called the lie detector the name is something of a misnomer. Its main function is not so much to detect a lie as it is to eliminate truthful people from a policeman's list of suspects.

Thus its scientific name — polygraph, meaning "many drawings" is more apropos. The machine in current fashion records four graphs which measure changes to a subject's respiration, perspiration and heart beat as he undergoes questioning.

Tests are strictly voluntary, follow a set routine and are conducted only upon the authorization, in this province, of RCMP chief superintendent Mark Marcus.

First there is the pre-test interview, generally lengthy session wherein the examiner tries to determine the subject's basic health, explains the working of the machine, and reviews in detail the questions to be asked.

"There is no sense giving a test to a subject who has a heart condition or a bad cold or flu," says Proke, "because the results on the graph would be distorted."

Similarly the mental state of the subject has to be carefully considered.

"The results will show not necessarily what the truth is but rather what the subject believes the truth to be. If, for example, he is a schizophrenic and believes devoutly he is Napoleon, the graph will show he is responding truthfully when we question him about it. In such cases we stop the test then and there."

Composing the questions to be asked is an art in itself. The examiner goes over the list with the subject to ensure there is no misunderstanding. The response must be a simple yes or no.

"Did you kill Sally Smith?", "Were you in the store at the time of the murder?", and so on.

"There can be no element of surprise in the questions because what we are recording are emotional changes. The four emotions, love, hate, fear and lying all look the same on the graph. The purpose of the interview is to eliminate the first three and concentrate on the last one — lying."

Before the test begins a blood pressure cup is wrapped around the subject's arm, two rubberized chains are snapped around his chest and metal plates attached to two fingers on one of his hands.

The actual test is short. Generally it's over in 15 minutes.

The questions are posed a minumum of three times. Then the examiner analyses the charts, compares reactions and comes to some sort of opinion. Only rarely are the results "indefinite" necessitating a re-run at a later time. Most often it is clear — the subject is either truthful of deceitful.

"There's no grey area," says Proke who has conducted more than 500 tests.

The subject is always advised of the results and if there has been a deceptive response indicated on the graph the examiner quizzes him about it.

"We're not out to convict anyone," says Proke, "and it's nonsense to consider the machine will ever supplant the judge and jury system."

He's loath to see polygraph results being used as evidence in the courts. He notes, however, there are no stated cases in Canadian law on whether a polygraph finding is acceptable evidence or not.

It hasn't been tried here yet, although in the United States if the prosecution and defence counsel agree, results are admissable in some courts.

"We try to stay out of the courts," he says. "After all, it is really up to the police officer to get the hard evidence needed to support a charge."

For Proke and his small band of examiners the polygraph is simply a valuable investigative aid. Nothing more. Nothing less.

Sgt. Proke is set to question subject

Happy With Nothing: Is This the Answer?

Since I first met Harry Cannon a dozen-odd years ago I've been convinced that he is one of the few truly happy men I know. Now I'm not too sure.

The question is: can a person live only for himself and claim happiness? I'll tell you how he looks at things and perhaps you'll give me your views.

First of all, Harry Cannon isn't his name. But that's what we'll call him here. All the rest is fact. He is a man of not more than 50, somewhat stout, ruddy-faced with a bulbous nose. He is a good-natured man, quick to laugh. I like him very much.

Harry lives aboard his boat and makes a living by a bit of cod-fishing and a bit of beach-combing, picking up logs that have broken from booms. Every once in a while, usually after a storm such as we had on the Easter week-end, he comes into our bay to look for tide-beached logs and rows ashore for a beer.

When this happened a couple of days ago I manoeuvered the talk around to a philosophical discussion about how to get the most from life.

"You seem to be a genuinely happy man, Harry," I said. "What's the secret?"

And Harry, becoming quite serious, began to talk.

"I'm a happy man," he said, "because I've limited my possessions to things that are absolutely essential. I've my boat and a change of clothes and some canned food in the locker and a bottle of Irish whisky and that's about all I own or want to own."

★ ★ ★

"You think, then, that the trouble with people is that they want too much?"

"They want too much and they have too much," Harry said. "Their lives are cluttered by possessions. Each one is a burden." He glanced back at our house. "There's your burden," he said. "You've a house and it's full of objects and you are responsible for each of them."

"I'm human," I said. "I like comfort."

"You buy comfort only by a loss of freedom," Harry said. "Every piece of furniture, every dish, every radio or TV set or record player, every so-called labor-saving device, is an extra burden on your shoulders. People are burying themselves, smothering themselves, under inanimate objects."

"It's an interesting point," I conceded, "but a man needs these things when he's raising a family. Have you ever had a family?"

"I never have, thank God," Harry said. "When I was a young man I came close to being trapped many, many times. The shadow of the altar loomed over me constantly. But every time I was tempted I would think to myself, 'Harry,' I'd think, 'guard your freedom.' What is a wife, what is a family, but more possessions to interfere with your independence?"

★ ★ ★

"I think you confuse independence with selfishness, if you'll forgive me," I said, boldly.

"All people are selfish," Harry said. "Everybody's out to get what he can while he's passing through. What I've got is my freedom. I walk alone and I like it."

I considered this for a minute and said, "I've thought a good deal about this, Harry. But the trouble with being independent is that it also means being lonely. There's a price to be paid for every attitude, isn't there?"

"Maybe so," Harry agreed. "But a man who is self-sufficient, as I see it, has the best chance for happiness. You said I looked like a happy man. Why? Because down deep you envy me. I'm like the birds. I go where I please. I don't have to do The Right Thing. I've nobody to please, nobody to hurt. I owe nobody and nobody owes me."

"And this boils down to rejecting possessions?"

"It does," said Harry. "I'll give you an example. A friend of mine at Comox gave me a pup, a wonderful, purebred collie. I called him Frisky. I had him for a year and he was a great pal. Then he took sick from eating something on the beach. He died. It upset me more than I can tell you. That's the way it is. Everything you own brings you pain in the end."

He finished his beer and said goodbye. I watched him row out to his boat and then chug out across the bay and around the point. And I went back to my possessions, my burden, my responsibility, and found them strangely comforting.

Gov't Firefighters Try Arbitration

The 1,400 firefighters employed by the federal government have taken their contract dispute with the Treasury Board to arbitration.

The firefighters, members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, are seeking a 30 per cent pay raise at all levels, elimination of the first job classification level and changes in hours of work and vacation pay.

There are about 140 government firefighters in Victoria, employed at HMC Dockyard and Victoria International Airport.

The firefighters' contract expired March 31 and the first hearing before the three-man arbitration board was held April 16.

The firefighters have the right to strike.

Meanwhile, about 35 firefighters employed by the provincial government have been ordered by the B.C. Labor Relations Board to stop any picketing activities at three locations around the province.

The firefighters, members of the trades and crafts component of the B.C. Government Employees Union set up picket lines March 17 at the University of B.C. endowment lands area, Riverview Hospital at Essondale and the Tranquille School in Kamloops.

The picketing continued until April 10, the date of the Labor Relations Board hearing, but during the time when picket lines were set up, the firemen continued to respond to all emergency calls.

LRB vice-chairman Ed Peck said in his decision on the case that the firefighters' picketing activity was brought about by 'deep-seated dissatisfaction and . . . generated by great frustration."

In the hearing, the firefighters claimed that because of the special services they provided, they should be a separate bargaining unit within the BCGEU, not lumped in with the 1,700-member trades and crafts group.

The firemen contend that they are considered public servants when it comes to bargaining a master agreement, but they would be considered the same as the Council of Lower Mainland Firefighters, if they ever went on a full strike and would probably be legislated back to work.

The firefighters said their picket lines were for information only, which is allowed under the Labor Code, but Peck ruled the picket lines were illegal.

He also ruled that the firefighters were rightly included under the trades and crafts component and said he presumed the legislature had already considered the possible ramifications of including the firefighters in a union which has the right to strike.

RCMP Counter Gem Smugglers

A rising tide of jewel smuggling into Canada has triggered some intensive countermeasures by the RCMP.

Three members of the RCMP's customs and exise squad in B.C. have just returned from a week-long course in Toronto aimed at countering the trend.

The three, two from Vancouver and one from Victoria received special training in the identification and detection of precious stones and metals. Twenty officers from coast to coast attended the study session.

Chief Superintendent Mark Marcus said the training was necessary to combat an alarming increase in the incidence of smuggling into this country.

He said the force has developed new methods of detecting smugglers, but declined to elaborate.

Marcus said several substantial seizures have been made in recent months in Vancouver — on the average about one a week involving thousands of dollars worth of jewelry and precious metals.

The majority of smuggled jewelry appears to be coming in from Switzerland and the Orient, he said, where it is obtained from legitimate sources. Often the jewelry is alleged to be heirloom pieces.

He said the influx in smuggling was in direct proportion to the increasing number of Canadians travelling abroad who are tempted by bargain deals in foreign countries.

It's a lucrative business.

For example, Omega watches which sell here for $500 can be bought in Switzerland for $80 to $90, and sapphires can be bought in Sri Lanka for only a fraction of the cost in Canada.

But it's a case of buyer beware.

"The purchaser better know what he's doing . . . he could end up discovering his so-called Omega has a Timex workings, or his sapphire is nothing more than a piece of glass."

Marcus does not feel the increase in smuggling is connected with organized crime but rather the work of independent operators.

"Of course, once they arrive here they have to get rid of the goods and then there has to be a certain amount of organization in fencing them off.

"Sure it's tempting . . . but the penalties they face if caught make it hardly worth while."

TV AUCTION NETS $14,000

About $14,000 raised by a television auction Saturday will go to Kiwanis charities in Victoria.

Auction chairman Ken Kenyon today said more than 300 items were donated by Victoria businesses.

Ten telephones rang from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. with bids for the all-new items which included furniture suites, televison sets, car accessories and trips to other Canadian cities.

The money will go toward such Kiwanis projects as Windward Village, a new senior citizens' complex in Sidney.

Cost Sharing Of Trial Urged

Greater Victoria School District superintendent Jake Longmore will propose tonight that the school board ask other B.C. boards to help pay costs of an upcoming court trial.

The trial will be held on an injunction granted March 25 by B.C. Supreme Court Judge R. A. Wootton limiting picketing at Victoria public schools.

The injunction was directed at striking school custodians, members of Local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, who returned to work two weeks later.

The action Longmore is recommending is that the school board ask the B.C. School Trustees Association for financial assistance to offset the trial costs for the Wooton injunction.

The results of the trial will affect every school district in the province, he said in his report to the April meeting of the board.

Central to the trial will be the question of whether sections of the Public Schools Act, which guarantee that children must be provided with education, take precedence over sections of the Labor Code.

In granting the injunction, Wootton said it is "most desirable that a trial on this matter be heard."

If the court finds the Public Schools Act does take precidence, other school boards could use the decision in dealing with strikes.

The trial is not expected to begin for many months.

Police Catch 12-Year-Olds

Two 12-year-olds were caught by police breaking into Glen Lake Service Station, 2712 Sooke Road, early Sunday morning, Colwood RCMP said today.

On routine property check at 2 a.m. police noticed a smashed front window at the service station.

The juveniles were caught inside.

Charges have been laid in juvenile court.

Holdup Try Investigated

Victoria police today were investigating an attempted armed robbery which occurred Saturday evening at the Crest Motor Inn, 455 Belleville.

Hotel manager William Andison refused to give details of the incident.

Pet Doctor Dies at 79

Jesse W. "Doc" Smith, Victoria veterinarian for 25 years, died in North Vancouver Friday.

The 79-year-old vet of 3015 Craigowan died of emphysema at the home of his physician son Verne.

For many years the only pet doctor in town, he moved to Victoria in 1944 and set up practice in Esquimalt.

He is survived by his wife Anne and other son Ronald, of Victoria.

Smith designed and built the Oak Bay Pet Clinic and later worked from a clinic in Sidney.

Also a community worker, Smith was a YMCA director for many years and helped start the Esquimalt Ratepayers' Association.

He was active in Esquimalt Boy Scout work, an alcoholic rehabilitation program and Kiwanis Club school safety patrol.

Fish Union Denies Meeting Ministry

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union has been denied a meeting with Ministry of Transport officials to discuss safety regulations on fishing boats.

The union asked for the meeting after 13 men died and 12 boats were sunk or capsized in B.C. waters during the herring season which started March 16.

Transport Minister Jean Marchand replied by telegram to the union's meeting request, saying an MOT investigation on the sinkings is already underway. A union spokesman said no mention was made of the proposed meeting and apparently union officials are dissatisfied with the reply.

The MOT investigation is expected to be completed late this week. The three investigators working on the problem will then return to Ottawa to draw up their report.

U.K. POLICE SEEK POWERFUL DRUG

LONDON (Reuter) — British police are investigating the appearance on the illegal drug market of a powerful new form of the hallucinogenic drug LSD, police sources said Sunday.

The sources confirmed a newspaper report describing the appearance of the drug, which concentrates LSD into tablets about the size of a microdot.

The newspaper said the drug is circulated in tablets no larger than the tip of a ballpoint pen. Each tablet was eight times more powerful than ordinary LSD tablets.

Officially, police would say only that "there is some substance in the story but we are not prepared to go into details."

Portugal Violent As Voting Nears

LISBON (AP) Pre-election violence erupted in northern Portugal today, and more than 20 persons were reported injured in several incidents.

Armed leftists besieged members of the moderate Centre Social Democrat (CSD) party holding a campaign rally in a threatre in Guimares.

Diplomatic sources said the leftists stoned the theatre, and military units were deployed to protect the CDS members. But the seige continued.

One soldier and two other persons were reported wounded by gunfire at Guimares. A Lisbon newspaper says units of the 2nd Light Artillery Regiment in Oporto were sent to Guimaraes as reinforcements.

A clash between leftists and CDS members also was reported in the streets of Oporcity.

Communist youths were said to have stoned a motorcade of CSD members, but military police prevented them from attacking the party headquarters.

An estimated 100,000 Portuguese socialist party supporters marched through the streets of downtown Lisbon Sunday, presenting a major challenge to the Communist party for the April 25 elections.

Political sources said the Socialist rally and march drew out more people than any political event in Portugal since the May Day parade organized a year ago by all political parties supporting the overthrow of the rightist dictatorship.

Portugal's national news agency, ANI, said more than 100,000 Socialist supporters crowded into a local soccer stadium to watch folk dances, listen to bands, and hear party leader Mario Soares speak.

Then they marched through the centre of the city in a line that stretched for two miles.

"We will win! We will win!" the crowds chanted as they marched.

Ontario Flood Threat Over

Canadian Press

Flooding problems ended Sunday night in most parts of Ontario suffering from the effects of storms since Friday.

Most water levels in the Grand River watershed area — including Kitchener, Guelph, Cambridge and Brantford — remained above normal Sunday night but were dropping, and no further problems with flooding are expected, an official of the Grand River Conservation Authority said.

Most flooding during the weekend was in low-lying, unpopulated areas and followed warm temperatures and 1¾ inches of rain Friday night, he said.

Water levels in the area were expected to be normal by mid-week.

A state of emergency declared Saturday night by Paris Mayor Jack Bawcutt because of possible flooding was lifted Sunday night after the crest of the Nith River passed without overflowing the banks.

Volunteers worked through Saturday night and Sunday to sandbag banks in Paris, northwest of Brantford, where the Nith River joins the Grand River.

Paris police said there was little damage except for a few flooded basements.

In New Hamburg, about 15 miles west of Kitchener, the racetrack fairgrounds were under water and some basements were flooded after water levels on the Nith River rose to a record 12 feet Saturday, up from 10.2 feet in 1974.

Cambridge merchants who feared a repeat of the 1974 flood boarded up stores and moved stock Saturday, but there was little damage as the crest of the Grand River passed through Cambridge Saturday night. The water level rose to 13.4 feet, 4½ feet below the flood level last year.

Farther north and west of the Grand River area, the Maitland and Saugeen rivers also flooded during the weekend, causing some evacuations.

Up to two feet of water covered downtown Listowel, 30 miles north of Stratford, early Saturday after the Maitland River flooded Friday night.

Listowel Mayor David Hay said Sunday owners of more than 30 stores had removed goods before the flood.

Flooding of the Thames River Saturday after a 1½-inch rainfall Friday night left three feet of water in a downtown section of St. Marys, about 10 miles southwest of Stratford.

In Stratford, the Avon River flooded, covering a street beside the Stratford Festival Theatre with a foot of water.

A 16-car CNR freight train was derailed Friday night in Hawestone, about five miles south of Orillia, because water covered 15 feet of track after a heavy rainstorm.

The players in the Stanley Cup are paid for only the first four games of each series, so Philadelphia Flyers saw no point in prolonging the agony in their best-of-seven quarter-final against Toronto Maple Leafs. They polished off the Leafs four straight with a 4-3 overtime victory Saturday. Buffalo Sabres, Montreal Canadiens and Pittsburgh Penguins have similar thoughts. They're leading 3-1 in their respective series. Page 10.

Bitter Thieu Quits, Lashes Out at U.S.

Times News Services

President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam today announced his resignation as North Vietnamese forces pressed closer toward Saigon.

He said former U.S. president Richard Nixon gave him written promises of aid but U.S. Secretary-of-State Henry Kissinger betrayed South Vietnam. "I never thought a man like Kissinger would deliver our people to such a fate," he charged.

Thieu's resignation opened the way for possible negotiations of a ceasefire with the Communists, but in Paris the Viet Cong raised new demands — immediate withdrawal of all Americans from Vietnam and elimination from power of all members of Thieu's "clique."

Whether the communists would even try to negotiate a cease-fire now was a matter of doubt.

They have massed 100,000 troops for a final assault on Saigon and have moved the front lines to within 26 miles of the presidential palace.

Hours before Thieu's resignation, military analysts in Saigon said the government's situation on the battlefield appeared hopeless.

Radio contact, meanwhile, was lost with South Vietnamese forces under heavy attack at Xuan Loc, the gateway to the capital 40 miles east of Saigon, and still another province on the coast 35 miles farther east apparently was about to fall.

In his speech Thieu predicted: "There will be more challenges and fierce fighting in the near future."

He then announced his resignation, and added:

"I told President Nixon and the U.S. Congress that I did not demand an indefinite assistance but only assistance for five years so we can develop our economy."

At Clark Air Base in the Philippines, the pace of evacuation from beseiged Saigon continued to quicken Sunday night with arrival of planeload after planeload of Americans and Vietnamese on the first leg of trips to the United States for the first time.

Some of the Vietnamese passengers were bearing large white "laissez passer" documents issued by the Saigon government, which serve both as exit visas and temporary entry permits to the United States.

The appearance of these diplomatic papers was taken as a sign that Saigon has begun to ease its strictness on departure of Vietnamese nationals.

Most of the Vietnamese arriving Sunday night appeared to be wives and children of departing Americans, many of them civilian contractors who worked for the American military in Saigon.

About 500 Vietnamese without travel papers are being held here as stateless persons pending decisions of the U.S. government.

The resignation of the 52-year-old Thieu and his denunciation of the United States raised fears of anti-American outbursts in the South Vietnamese capital.

"If the United States had intervened as it should, Thieu declared, "we would not be losing province capitals, district capitals, and we would not be faced with losing the national capital."

In Bangkok, Thai officials said today that Hhieu's resignation bodes ill for Thailand.

"It looks as though South Vietnam is going the way of Cambodia — I give it 10 days to a month," a Thai foreign ministry spokesman said.

EAST POSTIES OFF THE JOB

Times News Services

Letter carriers walked off the job at 6 a.m. local time for an indefinite period in Ottawa, Kitchener-Waterloo, Ont., and Saskatoon.

Picket lines were set up at post offices but inside workers were allowed to cross them.

The union has been in a legal position to go on strike since April 14 and the men "were just exercising their right to strike," said Ottawa union representative Alex Edey.

Negotiations between the union and the post office are scheduled today, he said.

Main issue in talks between the post office and union negotiators in a conciliation report which proposes wage increases totalling $68 a week over two years. Three-year letter carriers now earn an average $177.60 a week.

Increases in the conciliation report are 38 per cent; the government has offered 25 per cent over two years.

The Letter Carriers Union and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers last week agreed that if one union goes on strike, it will lift picket lines temporarily to allow members of the other union to go to and from work.

POUND REPEATS PLUMMET

LONDON (CP) — The pound dropped sharply Monday to match its record low against major currencies amid reports British authorities will allow further depreciation of sterling rather than rely on borrowing abroad.

The Bank of England's calculation of the trade-weighted depreciation of the pound against 10 currencies widened to match the record depreciation set April 14 and Jan. 28.

The pound fell more than one cent to $2.3622 U.S. from $2.3754 Friday.

The London Sunday Times said the U.K. Treasury was prepared to let sterling drop rather than continue borrowing abroad to support it.

Meanwhile, gold declined sharply amid rumors that some South Vietnamese gold was reaching the market. The price fell to $165.60 U.S. an ounce at the London afternoon fixing from $168 in the morning and $170.25 Friday afternoon. Later, a London dealer was quoting $165 an ounce bid $165.75 offered.

Levy for School Tax Taking a Bigger Bite

Taxpayers in B.C. will pay an average of 41.21 mills to cover school costs this year, an increase of 7.15 mills over 1974.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly announced the increases today and promised school districts an additional $25.5 million in special grants to help cover mounting educational costs.

The basic school tax levy applied to all districts in B.C. has been set at 26.5 mills, an increase of 1.8 mills over last year, said Dailly, but almost all school districts have drawn up budgets far in excess of the basic budget allowance set by the provincial government and thus actual tax rates will be much higher.

Under the government's complicated financing formula, the government sets out a basic mill rate all school boards can levy (26.5 mills this year) and the basic amount it can spend for each student in the district.

The difference between the revenue raised by the basic tax rate and the basic education cost is then provided by the government in the form of a grant.

But, since all districts have costs over and above the basic budget and those costs are paid by local taxpayers, the average mill rate is much higher.

Last year the average school mill rate was 34.06 almost 10 mills higher than the basic rate and this year the average rate is 15 mills over the basic levy.

Dailly also announced $25.5 million in supplementary special aid grants to school districts to help them maintain existing programs and staffing levels this year.

The special money follows a commitment by the minister last January that no district will incur mill rate increases dramatically higher than the over-all average.

Last year the government provided an additional $21 million in special grants to school boards in order to help them reduce pupil-teacher ratios and to lessen the impact of inflating education costs on local taxpayers.

Earlier this year, Dailly would not say whether the government planned to repeat those special grants and school boards warned they would have to cut back on programs unless additional funds were forthcoming.

In some districts, where enrolments are increasing at an especially rapid rate, school boards reported they could not possibly continue the reduced student-teacher ratios without huge increases in local taxes.

Dailly said $3.8 million of the additional grants will go to those districts which had an increase in enrolments and special classes last fall.

Immediate Gas Export Talks Set

WASHINGTON (CP) — Canadian and United States officials are scheduled to meet Tuesday in Ottawa to discuss proposed price increases on Canadian natural gas exported to the U.S.

Julius Katz, deputy assistant state secretary in the division of economics and business affairs, will lead the U.S. group, Katz's office said today.

"The subject is natural gas, that's all I can tell you," the spokesman said.

One informed source, who asked not to be identified, said: "The U.S. has requested the talks and Canada has agreed."

It would not immediately known who would speak for Canada.

John Nassikas, head of the Federal Power Commission (FPC), was tentatively scheduled to go but—because of a prior commitment to testify on Capitol Hill on Tuesday—will send Frank Allen, his top staff man on natural gas matters.

The word that the U.S. had asked for the meeting came less than 24 hours after two veteran senators had sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau asking for a delay in price increases.

CUPE, Region Renew Mediation

Mediation talks were renewed today for the third time in Greater Victoria civic employees dispute which entered its 14th week this morning.

The meeting at Royal Oak Inn was called by provincial mediation officer Clark Gilmour, who was asked to arrange it by regional employers who, it is reported, are looking for a change in approach by the Canadian Union of Public Employees which represents municipal staffs.

On behalf of the union, CUPE Local 50 president Jim Walker was non-commital prior to the meeting.

Just before the sides moved into separate meeting rooms, Walker said, "we're here to hear what they've got to say."

He did not indicate that the unions had any proposal to put forward and pointed out that all CUPE locals in the past two weeks had given their neogitators votes of confidence.

Gilmour made no prediction on how long today's meetings would last.

90 SEE DRIVER BEATEN

TORONTO (CP) — A 24-year-old Toronto bus driver was badly beaten by four youths on the weekend while about 90 passengers sat and watched.

"They just looked at me as if they were watching TV," said driver Jack Sardinha. "Not a single person would make a move."

He was treated for a cut eye and other head injuries.

A pregnant woman trying to board the bus was pushed to the ground and injured and a construction worker, who saw the incident and chased the youths, was struck in the forehead with a brick.

Sardinha said the incident began when a youth threw a quarter in the fare box and the other three just "marched right by." The regular fare is 40 cents.

He said he tried to stop one of the men, who claimed he had paid the fare, and the fight began.

"I tried to get up and as soon as I moved one of his buddies just let me have it. Then it was a chain reaction and they all piled on like a pack of wolves . . . They were really going at me."

Garnet Gardield Reid 16, Lenny Andrew Wilson, 18, Hansel Alonzo, 18, and Everton George Brown, 18, all of Toronto, have been charged with assault causing bodily harm and will appear in court today.

WCB Pays . . . 44 Years Late

A 61-year-old Nanaimo man has won a 44-year battle with the Workers Compensation Board and will finally receive compensation for a crippling accident that happened when he was 17.

Frank Oblack will be paid a pension retroactive to 1931 and will receive five per cent interest on the money he should have been receiving since then, the disability award officer of the WCB has ruled.

Oblack will probably receive a lump sum payment in about two months, after the WCB has computed the amount of his pension.

Oblack won his case with the help of a Victoria organization, the Disability Rights Association, set up about three years ago to help workers in their claims against the WCB.

In 1931, when Oblack was an inexperienced boy of 17 working at the South Wellington mine near Nanaimo, he was crushed between a mine car and a post which was standing too close to the car track.

He was taken to hospital in serious condition with a crushed pelvis and has suffered a deformity of both the hips and pelvis since then. He has been unable to perform many types of work because of the injury.

At the time of the accident, his claim was turned down by the Workman's Compensation Board which ruled that Oblack was not performing part of his regular duties when he was crushed by the mine car.

The case became famous in the Nanaimo area and was appealed to the Board of Commissioners of the WCB, but again turned down. In 1941, the case was contested at the Sloan Inquiry held in Nanaimo and again turned down. But this time there was
